Primarily for the benefit of these students and to get others interested, we are intending to practice one night per week and one practice during school time. We are inviting any persons who play instruments and who would like to play with us and who are willing to come and help out the beginners, to come to these practices. Check your corn losses!

Next season you can avoid these losses and increase your corn profits by treating your seed corn before planting.

The new Bayer treatment protects the seed from disease organisms on the seed and in the soil. It allows the seed to germinate and grow unmolested. Seed that is not treated is forced to fight the rots and molds which cause poor germination, "down" corn, root and stalk rots. And you lose bushels that should be dollars in your pocket.

Makes Poor Seed Good

This treatment insures germination and sturdy growth never before possible from poor seed. Even selected seed is benefited by the treatment because of the protection it is given against the injurious and costly attacks of soil-infesting diseases.

Tested by U. S. Dept. of Agric.

Extensive tests by the U. S. Department of Agriculture show that the BAYER DUST treatment of nearly disease-free Dent corn gave an increase of 8.5 bushels per acre; of Diplodia infected seed, 15.8 bushels; and of Gibberella infected seed, 28.9 bushels. Phytopathology, January, 1926.

Costs but a Few Cents per Acre

You need no special equipment for this new seed treatment. No tiresome or lengthy procedure is involved. Two bushels of seed can be treated in less than three minutes. And the cost is less than 5c per acre.

Bayer seed treatment comes in two forms: BAYER DUST for Dust treatment and USPULUN for Soak treatment. Most growers prefer the Dust treatment because it is quicker and saves the trouble of drying the seed. Both are equally effective.

Increases Your Profits

BAYER DUST or USPULUN pay their small cost many times over because they:

Permit earlier planting.
Prevent soil decay.
Increase germination.
Prevent seedling blight, root and stalk rot.
Reduce the amount of "down" corn.
Increase the yield.
And bring greater profits.

TRY THIS HOME TEST ON YOUR SEED CORN

Prove the value of this treatment to your own satisfaction before the planting season. Today, get a 50c tin of BAYER DUST or USPULUN from your dealer. Select 50 kernels of corn at random from your seed corn. Treat 25 seeds and plant them in a cigar box or flower pot. Plant 25 untreated seeds in a similar container. Then watch them grow. The results will amaze you.

One pound of either treats six bushels of seed corn

Bayer Dust: 4 oz. 50c; 1 lb. $1.75; 5 lbs. $8.00. Uspulun: 2 oz. 50c; 1 lb. $2.75; 5 lbs. $13.00

If your dealer's stock of BAYER DUST and USPULUN has not yet arrived, send us his name and address. THE BAYER CO., Inc., 117 Hudson Street, New York City.

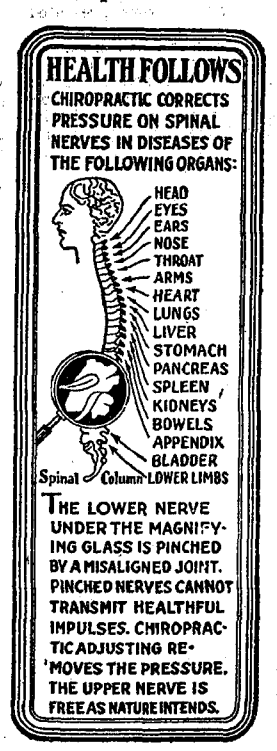
Stop the Leak!

If a water pipe burst you would have no doubt as to the proper measure of correction, which is to repair the leak, and remove the cause. If an equally simple accident creates havoc within your body, are you as logical?

All dis-ease with which the human family is afflicted has a cause. Most dis-ease has a single, simple cause—pressure upon nerves which prevent a proper flow of motive power to the various cells and organs of the body.



In cases of nervous disorders the very nature of the trouble suggests that the trouble lies in the nerves, yet we find all sorts of remedies, tangible and otherwise, being applied to the removal of effects. Chiropractic spinal adjustments alone deal directly with the cause!

SANITARIUMS FAIL— ADJUSTMENTS SUCCEED

"Since 1920, when I had a nervous breakdown, I found nothing that really helped me until I began taking adjustments a year ago. I had never been treated much by physicians, but once started I seemed to be a target for experiments. At one sanitarium my system was so saturated with a strong dope that both hearing and eyesight have been permanently injured. From another I was sent home. Soon afterwards I began taking adjustments. My improvement was such that I was dismissed July 1st, 1923." Miss O. C. Vanhook, Chiropractic Research Bureau, Statement No. 2118-M.

THE STORY

CHAPTER I.—With a stranger, whom he introduces as his nephew, Ned Carter, Claude Melnotte Dabbs returns from New York to his general grocery at Peace Valley, Pa. To "Aunt Lyddy," his housekeeper, he explains that Carter is a chance acquaintance, veteran of the World war, whom he had met and taken a liking to.

CHAPTER II.—Carter tells Aunt Lyddy he has broken with his family and his sweetheart because of his resentment of their ultra pacific tendencies. With Dabbs Ned visits Clover Hollow, abiding place of a "collection of good-natured cranks," according to the grocer. They almost run over a dog belonging to a girl whom Carter apparently recognizes. Ned delivers a grocery order, and in his absence the girl, Dorothy Selden, reveals that she knows him to be Ned Carter Rangeley, son of Loren Rangeley, New York banker.

CHAPTER III.—Next day Ned commences work as a "grocer's boy." At a residence, the "White House," he delivers an order marked "Johnston." There he meets a girl who tells him she and her mother are alone in the house, the servants having left them because of the "loneliness." He promises to try to procure household help. Meeting Dorothy Selden, his erstwhile sweetheart, he baffles her attempts to discover the reason for his presence in Peace Valley. Arrangement is made for a cook to go to the Johnstons'.

CHAPTER IV.—The cook being unable to begin work at once, Ned visits the White House to inform Miss Johnston of the fact. Explaining the situation to her mother, the girl, "Mary," is astonished by that lady's emotion at the mention of Dabbs' name. The cook arrives, and Mary, with Ned, goes to the village for groceries. They are seen by Dorothy Selden. Mrs. Johnston, worried over financial troubles, is bothered by Dorothy, who warns her there is something suspicious about Ned Carter.

CHAPTER V.—There is something about Mary vaguely familiar to Dabbs, and he is highly interested in village gossip concerning the mother and daughter. Mrs. Johnston accompanies Mary to an inn for luncheon. Dabbs sees Mrs. Johnston and is obviously perturbed. He informs Ned he has something on his mind that he would like to tell him.

CHAPTER VI.—Claude reveals to Ned a romance of his early life. He had married, while at college, and under peculiar circumstances, and his wife left him the day after the ceremony. He is convinced "Mrs. Johnston" is his wife, "Polly," and naturally wants to know, Who is Mary?

CHAPTER VII.—Mrs. Johnston tells Mary they are practically penniless, through a trustee's defalcation. She plans an appeal to Loren Rangeley, her banker, and Mary [illegible] dissuade her. Wh[illegible]ary falls into a [illegible]out, unhurt, but th[illegible]im the real nat[illegible]rd the girl. [illegible] attempt to clear [illegible] Dabbs sends Mrs. Johnston [illegible]e had from her when they were married. She keeps the money, satisfying Dabbs she is his wife, but, Who is Mary? Mrs. Johnston and her daughter go to New York, on Dabbs' money. Dabbs tells Ned he knows he is Rangeley's son, and the two men arrange to follow the women. "Polly" informs Loren Rangeley she and Mary are going to Europe.

CHAPTER IX.—Mrs. Johnston tells her daughter something of her early life and poverty, and acknowledges that Dabbs is Mary's father. The girl is pleased, declaring she likes Dabbs.

CHAPTER X.—Claude, at a meeting with Mary, is overjoyed when the girl gladly acknowledges their relationship. He has for some time been convinced the girl is his daughter. She tells him she and her mother are sailing to Europe next day. Dabbs promises to meet Mary there. She tells him her mother is in financial straits, but declines his offer of pecuniary assistance, believing him a comparatively poor man.

"Heavens!" she gasped. "Did I say it out loud? I was afraid I would."

"Say it!" commanded C. M., and shook her a little.

"Don't Dad, you frighten me."

She was engulfed in C. M.'s embrace. He held her closely and she found it not in the least alarming or uncomfortable.

He was murmuring to himself: "My little girl! My Mary!" Then he held her off as she had him, and looked at her. Mary looked into a pair of blue eyes marvelously like her own. There was a softness of tears behind them, but none fell.

"Don't be frightened. Your father doesn't mean to be rough. Only—

My God! All the years I've wanted you. I'll never forgive Polly for that."

C. M.'s grasp upon her tightened again. "Not a word. Only she should have told me, long ago."

"Yes, I think so, too, Dad," Mary agreed, "but I can't make her see it."

C. M. looked down at her sternly. "How long have you known?"

"Since last night. I haven't been able to think about anything else, but Mother won't talk about it, and she meant me not to tell. I didn't tell, did I?"

"Not strictly speaking," C. M. assured her. "You just said 'Father,' all to yourself, and I heard you."

"Dear, dear," and Mary tried to sound distressed and repentant, "what will become of me when Mother knows?"

C. M.'s arm tightened about her, as though for protection. Mary leaned on it.

"The thing that's got to be understood between us at once, is that my mother is the sweetest, best-looking, most wonderful mother a girl ever had. Father, what were you thinking about to let her get away from you?"

Claude frowned. He led Mary back to her chair and sat down beside her. "See here," he said, looking at his daughter in alarm, "I don't know how much Polly has told you."

"Everything."

"Everything!" C. M. started from his chair, changed his mind and sat down heavily. "Then that saves me something. We're not going to discuss it."

Mary nodded. "Let's take everything for granted, and go right on from now. That will be the best thing."

"How can we?"

"We must," Mary announced with decision. "There's got to be certain reticences."

"Oh, Lord!" groaned Claude. "You don't think I want to talk over these 'certain reticences' with you." He breathed heavily. "No, it's Polly." He looked at Mary as though they had been in league for years. "How can we get round her?"

Mary came to him quietly, perched herself on his knee, and put her arm about his neck. He did want petting so badly. "Mother will simply have to take notice of my father."

C. M. promptly kissed her. It was a nice kiss, on the cheek, and C. M. wasn't clumsy about it either. Mary's appreciation of him rose. He had a certain deftness, this big man. He wasn't clumsy nor was he vulgar. Mother might have—but Claude interrupted her train of thought.

"One thing I can't forgive is keeping you from me. I can hardly keep from squeezing the life out of you, Mary. I'm so glad to have you within reach, and know you're my girl. But the little Mary! By Jiminy! How sweet you must have been with your hair down your back, or maybe tied with a big bow of ribbon, and little strapped slippers on your cute little feet. Polly cheated me out of that. Why, look, you're a great big girl, and I'm a strange man to you, and you may be engaged to some hulking fellow, for all I know, and no room in your life for a father."

Despite the fact that he tried to treat it lightly, Mary felt the poignant regret in his tone, and her heart ached for her father. What could she do to make him know that he had not only a place in her life but her heart.

"I'm not engaged," she assured him, as she put up her hands to her smart little hat and jerked it off, and slipped from his knee. "Maybe no one will ever ask me." Claude made a little noise of scornful unbelief, but Mary stopped him. "Stare hard at that picture and don't look around until I tell you."

"Now!"

C. M. felt something soft and silky touching his hand. He looked at Mary. Her hair down her back as a child would wear it, she was standing beside him, smiling fearlessly. The years seemed to have slipped away from her.

Dabbs laid his big hand caressingly on the silky head, but shook his own. "You're a dear, Mary, but put it up, my girl. It isn't the same thing. Not but what I'd be content enough if I could have you running in and out of my house now, but there's Polly. I'll have to take you back to her, and then what?"

Mary could not answer him. She went to the mirror over the little writing desk and began piling up her hair. "Shall I tell her I've seen you?" she asked.

Dabbs watched her, fascinated. It was wonderful to think that slender lovely thing was his daughter. "Would that be a good thing, do you think?"

Mary thought for a moment, then shook her head. As she slowly put a shell pin in, she had made up her mind to tell him about Mother. It was the best thing, to be absolutely frank. She couldn't juggle things the way Mother did: "You'd better know about Mother," she announced. "We're sailing for Venice tomorrow."

"Tomorrow! Venice!"

Mary nodded as she drove home the last two pins and reached for her hat. "Mother's running away. We're running away from you, and my instinct tells me Mother will run far."

Dabbs sat down on the arm of the chair, thinking.

"And if I tell her I've seen you—why, she'll move again, and it won't be Venice, and I won't be able to tell you where we are going."

"You're not to tell her," Dabbs said, decidedly, "and it will be Venice. Do you know your hotel?"

"The Royal Danielli."

"Well, say nothing. I'll meet you there."

"You'll meet us! Oh, Father! Can you leave the grocery store?"

Dabbs nodded, smiling. "Easy I can, when it's you."

Mary settled her hat with a slightly saucy tilt. "Then you'll tell Mother there. My! It's romantic!" Dearly would she love to see the meeting.

C. M. crossed the room, took her by the dimpled chin and tilted her face so that he could look into the eyes that she tried to hide with her long lashes.

"It isn't romantic," he said. "And much as it would please you to manage the affair, young lady, you can't. Polly Johnston and I will manage that part of it by ourselves."

"Oh Father, how could you?"

"I'm not so slow as I look, daughter, and I know Polly. She was never to be driven, or coaxed either. Polly will have to settle it herself, and that's the only safe way."

Mary gave his arm a squeeze. "Oh, C. M. Dabbs, you're a wonder. If the angels had asked me, I couldn't have picked any father I'd like better."

Claude looked at her gravely. "I'm rough, in some ways, girl, but if you like me I haven't wasted my life."

"I only wish I was a boy, Father. How we would develop your grocery business together, and make money so that Mother would admire us!"

Dabbs frowned. "I don't want you a boy. The angels suited me, too, when they picked you." He held Mary's hand tightly in his. "Mary, is Polly like that still? Does she care as much about money, I mean?"

Mary studied her father as she answered: "She does and she doesn't. Mother isn't easy to explain. She likes the things money brings with it—and she hasn't much left."

Dabbs started. "How's that?"

Mary explained as much as she knew, and Dabbs frowned as she mentioned the borrowing from Loren Rangeley.

"Mary, shall we give her money?"

Mary shook her head. "Not now. It wouldn't be quite safe. Mother would use it to run further away from—us."

Dabbs looked pleased at the "us" but he frowned a moment afterward, and when Mary touched his arm gently, looked down at her warily. "I'm trying to figure out, daughter, whether you're right about the money. I guess you are, though. As you say, Polly'd only use it to get further away from me, and that would keep us apart. Besides, it mustn't be money that brings Polly to me. It must be—you. You can see that."

"Of course. I can Mother's point of view, too," Mary admitted, wishing to be absolutely fair to the absent, which is always so difficult a task when sympathies are mostly with those present. "But I somehow feel on your side, Dad, and when the pinch comes, I'll warn you and we'll act together. Then we will see what Mother does. She's—well, surprising! You can never tell about Mother."

She moved toward the door. Mother would be waiting, and that was beginning to trouble her. "Oh, hurry after us to Venice, Father. We've got so much to say to each other, and there's no time left for us today. And," she paused to make this emphatic, "you must not come further than the elevator with me. If Mother saw me with you, she wouldn't say a word, but it would not be Venice."

"Just as you say, dear, and I suppose it's safer, but I hate it." Claude moved to the door with her, and as they reached it he said, hesitatingly: "Mary, do you need any money? I've plenty."

"Generous old dear," Mary thought, but what she said was: "Oh, I'm quite all right, as long as Mother's holds out. The question is, how long can you stand the pace Mother's setting?"

Claude started to speak and stopped himself. "Oh, I can hold out for some time," he told her cheerfully, "and there's always the grocery business."

Mary patted his arm. "Of course, and if it wasn't for Mother, I'd go back with you now like a shot and keep books or sell things behind the counter. Wouldn't it be fun? It's Mother who keeps me from doing it. Mother can't be left alone, you see."

Claude Dabbs put his arm about his daughter. "I knew it. I always knew you were all right, Mary. It won't come to leaving Polly. We'll try and arrange it so we can each have a share of you—sort of share and share alike."

Mary patted his hand, but looked a little dubious. She put an arm about his neck and drew his head down and kissed him. "I may have to lie a little for you," she warned him, "but surely in such a good cause, I'll be forgiven. At least I'll chance it."

The elevator came and she was gone, and he knew that the better part of valor should keep him from watching from his windows. But all the fears and cares of a family man, which begin with the child's birth and spread gradually and with decreasing force through the long years of the child's growth and maturity, had suddenly assailed Claude Dabbs, and he wondered, fiercely, what Polly could be thinking of to allow such a girl as his Mary to go about alone.

SCHOOL NOTES

played baseball during the class period.

The seventh grade are feeling quite proud over the writeup the Des Moines Register gave their Healthy and Wealthy Club in one of last week's editions.

The Healthy and Wealthy Club have a dandy report for this week. Only one boy drank tea or coffee. The saving this week was $1.19. This is a fine record, let's keep it up.

The High School girls held an inter-class basket ball tournament Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of last week. Each class except the Senior, had two teams, an A team and a B team. The Junior B team defeated the Freshman B team, but was defeated by the Sophomore team. The A teams played a round-robin tournament, and were ranked according to points. The ranking is as follows: Sophomore, Junior, Senior, Freshman.

This is the last week of the six weeks' period, and everyone is very busy, trying to leave a good impression before grades are sent in. Because of the Exhibit, and the Parent-Teachers' Association meeting this week, most of the tests were given last week. Just now we are all walking on our tip-toes and hoping for the best.

Anna Stacha and Zelma Thorgar were visitors Friday in Miss Heggan's room.

Mr. Hall attended the joint meeting of the National Physical Training Association, the Mid-West Physical Training Association, and the Central State Teachers' Physical Training Association, at the convention at Des Moines last week.

The children who are taking milk have been weighed and many are gaining. They take it once a day and take rational meals at home. The nurse is examining the High School students this week.

The playground slide is again fixed.

The boys' inter-class track meet will be held some time next week.

Barbara Chamberlin is not able to come to school because she is sick with the measles.

IOWA CROP SUMMARY

APRIL 1, 1927

A favorable winter wheat prospect for Iowa is shown by early spring survey of April 1, by the Federal and State Crop Reporting Service. The average condition of winter wheat for Iowa on April 1, 1927 was 88 percent of normal. This shows an improvement of three points since December 1, 1926. Although much of the winter wheat seeding was delayed last fall by the rains and unfavorably moist seed bed conditions, there is not much fear for a poor growth this spring. Even the wheat which failed to get a heavy root system established last fall is apparently getting a normal start now. The average condition now is five points more favorable than that represented by the ten-year average on April 1.

The most important winter wheat area of Iowa confines itself quite largely to three counties in southeastern Iowa, less than a dozen counties in the south-central section and a few counties bordering along the Missouri river. Mr. Leslie M. Carl, Federal Agricultural Statistician states that reports from Lee, Louisa and Des Moines counties indicate the condition of winter wheat to be from five to eight points below the average for the state. Warren, Union and Madison are important wheat counties and the condition of wheat in those counties is well above the average of the state. Along the Missouri river, from Woodbury county southward, winter wheat is reported to be showing above the normal early spring progress.

The average condition of winter wheat for the United States on April 1, 1927 was 84.5 percent of normal, compared with 84.1 on April 1, 1926, 68.7 on April 1, 1925 and 79.8 the average condition for the past ten years on April 1. There was an increase in condition from December 1, 1926 to April 1, 1927 of 2.7 points as compared with an average decline in the past ten years of 4.6 points between these dates.

Rye is a small patch crop in Iowa, less than a dozen counties having a thousand or more acres of this crop. On April 1, 1927 the average condition of this crop was 93 percent of normal, compared with 91 percent for the ten-year average. Rye made a progress of three points since December 1, 1926 and is expected to advance more rapidly during the rest of April than other winter crops.

The average condition of rye for the United States on April 1, 1927 was 86.4 percent of a normal, compared with 80.2 on April 1, 1926 and 85.8 the average condition for the past ten years on April 1.

Pastures in Iowa have made rapid progress and are reported as 92 percent of a normal or five points higher than a year ago. In nearly all of the southern counties pastures are becoming green quite rapidly, but have not made sufficient growth to carry many head of livestock. In the northwestern counties the pastures are expected to show a very substantial improvement over conditions in the season of 1926 when the drouth destroyed many bluegrass pastures.

To the Patrons of the Banks of Wright County:

A bank within a community is no longer a private business enterprise but a community affair. Its success has such a far reaching influence upon the financial welfare of those within its vicinity that its interests are mutual with those of every citizen who resides within its territory.

For this reason that which affects the success of a bank affects all and as such is of vital interest to the public.

It is a fact that a bank cannot give the service and safety in its affairs to which patrons are entitled, unless its business is conducted upon a basis which returns a fair margin of profit to the bank.

For this reason patrons have within their power to increase or diminish the service which they are to receive from their bank precisely to the extent to which they give or withhold their co-operation.

Particularly is this true in the matter of checking accounts. The checking account privilege is probably the most expensive service a bank offers, entailing as it does the purchase of bank-books, check-books, deposit slips, checks, etc., as well as the cost of bookkeeping in connection with the accounts.

The only profit a bank receives from these accounts is the interest it receives from loaning the money deposited with it, but the amount it can loan is small. Good banking requires the bank to keep a large part of these deposits in reserve. If the depositor constantly checks out all or nearly all his balance each month, there is none to loan and the bank can make no profit on the account with which to pay the expense of handling it.

Careful investigation has proven that to cover the cost of an account a balance must be maintained of at least $50 each month over and above the amount that is checked out at any time. The Wright County Bankers Association has therefore adopted a resolution that, after April 1st, 1927, any checking account which fails to average $50 for the month will be charged 50 cents for the checking service.

If a checking account is essential it is suggested that the balance be increased to $50 and maintained as a permanent balance, which will cover the cost of handling the account. Those few who find it impossible to maintain a permanent balance of $50, and do not wish to pay this service fee, are invited to transfer their accounts to a Cashier's Check, or Savings Account, where their funds will receive the same certain safety and can be withdrawn at will in lump sums as needed, but not by check.

This charge has not been instituted with the idea of collecting 50 cents per month on the small accounts but with the hope that it will call the depositors' attention to the fact that they are carrying small balances, and to induce them to increase their balances to a point where they will cover the actual cost of handling the accounts.

Please co-operate so that your bank may do everything within its power to make your business relations with it of the greatest possible value to you.

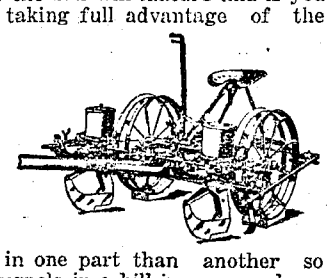
ABOUT YOUR

Corn Planter

The reason for using a corn planter is to save time. It would be better though to plant your corn by hand rather than to use a machine which would not give you an accurate job of planting. Too many kernels in a hill often times provides more plants than the fertility of the soil will mature and if you do not get enough kernels in a hill you are not taking full advantage of the fertility of your soil. You lose in either case.



If the corn planter you are using misses two kernels out of every one hundred it should plant, you lose 213 ears or 1.92 bushels per acre. If your planter misses five kernels out of one hundred you are losing 532 ears, or 4.8 bushels. You can see from these figures that an inaccurate planter soon loses you the entire profit on an acre of corn.

Often times your fields are more fertile in one part than another so that you can to advantage plant three or four kernels in a hill in some places where in other places you would want only three or two. The planter you use should be such a machine as will enable you to make this change instantly and still maintain accuracy.

Your land may be in such condition that you would want to add some fertilizer and it should not be necessary for you to make a separate operation of this fertilizer distribution. A good planter will enable you to do this at the same time you plant your corn.

Last year Mr. A. B. Knutson, of Clear Lake, Iowa raised 106.67 bushels an acre on five acres of corn. He used the planter we would like to show you. There are many advantages in using this planter but the most important one is its extreme accuracy. Let us show it to you the next time you are in town.

SEEK TO KEEP NO. 15 OPEN

Luncheon Club Appoints Three To Look Into Matter Here.

Regular session of the Luncheon Club was held last Friday noon at the hotel. On account of the absence from the city of President T. A. Davenport, the meeting was held Friday instead of Thursday, the regular time. The committee on by-laws had not met since the last last meeting, and was continued until the next session when they will report on changing the by-laws of the club. A committee was appointed to take up the matter of the detour sign north of town on Primary 15, which it is claimed is misleading to drivers coming from the north, and to see about having Primary 15 south of town open for traffic this summer while the road is being graded and improved.

FOUND LOST RING

After being without her wedding ring thirty-seven years, Mrs. Ben Michaelson, living near Kamrar, Iowa, has the pleasure of wearing the emblem of her marriage, all thru the chance of finding of the circlet of gold in a field.

While walking across his field the other day Henry Olthoff was attracted by a glitter of a small object beneath his feet. He picked it up to find that it was a ring. Upon cleaning it and observing the initials in the ring he believed it belonged to a neighbor. Mrs. Michaelson immediately identified the ring as having belonged to her prior to a tornado which wrecked the Michaelson home thirty-seven years ago. Mrs. Michaelson was making bread at the time and had placed her two rings in a cup on the table. When the storm broke, demolishing the house the ring evidently had been borne through the air for a great distance, to lodge in the neighboring field and lie nearly forty years before being found.

Mrs. R. E. Courson was hostess to the Progress club Tuesday. It was the concluding meeting for the year and a very enjoyable time was made of the affair.

The Congregational missionary society meets at the church parlors, this afternoon. The hostesses are Mrs. Frank Christie, Mrs. W. C. Tyrrell and Mrs. Preston Tyrell.

CITY OFFICERS GET TWO BOOTLEGGERS IN RAID AT SUGAR FACTORY MONDAY

Four Quarts Booze And Still Secured

OFFICERS DO GOOD WORK

Solomon Neueaz and Joe Parniz, Mexicans, were taken into custody, Monday morning, by City Marshal Finn and Night Marshal Quandt on charges of bootlegging. A total of four and one-half quarts of booze and a still were secured in the raid made on the Mexican quarters on the sugar company grounds.

Neueaz and Parniz were taken before Justice of the Peace J. H. Fetrow, and being unable to furnish bonds were taken to Clarion by Deputy Sheriff Dan Leonard to await trial. They will be brought back Saturday to stand trial at 1:30 p. m. before Justice Fetrow.

Marshal Finn, securing evidence that bootlegging was going on at the Mexican quarters, went down Monday morning and arrested Neueaz and brought him back to town. Securing a search warrant, Finn then got Quandt and the two returned to the sugar company grounds where they searched the Neueaz and Parniz homes and arrested Parniz. At the Neueaz residence, they found about a quart hidden in a stove reservoir in the hall. At the Parniz shack, Officer Finn located three and one-half quarts in the attic, and over behind a partition in the attic, next to the chimney, discovered the still in a sack. The evidence, along with Parniz, was taken into custody and brought to the city hall.

Neueaz is a single man, Parniz being married with eight children. Officers have been suspicious for some time that liquor was being manufactured and sold in the Mexican quarters, and secured sufficient evidence Monday to warrant the search. They are to be commended for their excellent work, Marshal Finn's work in this case being particularly effective.

Paved road advocates are getting in some hard licks in propaganda this spring, following the condition of Iowa's roads. No matter how good the graveled road, nothing in its favor is said; the mud holes occupy the Front line of attack. From Belmond to Des Moines on Primary No. 15, are two or three bad places, two of them just south of Belmond on a stretch where nothing has been done of any magnitude to repair the damage. The rest of the road is good, yet Primary 15 is reported "impassible" and traffic is diverted to other routes. This short stretch south of Belmond is to be completely graded and drained this summer, and little attention has been given the few bad spots on it because of this fact. It all depends on what you wish to call "impassible." No. 15 is not "impassible," and in fact is a mighty good road with the exception of a few short stretches, which could have been fixed with little expense. Seemingly, all over the state, no undue effort has been made to fix these bad spots on the graveled roads. The unusual spring with the heavy rains has admittedly caused some bad spots. The paving advocates have utilized every one of them to "prove" the futility of graveled roads. It would be interesting to know just how much of this propaganda is paid for, and whether the seeming neglect of the mud holes has been intentional. Iowa does not need paved roads except where truck and bus traffic is heavy; gravel will not stand up under heavy truck traffic, we all admit that, and where there are main highways with this kind of traffic paving is the logical soluton. But to condemn all graveled roads, as some of the editorial writers of the state have been doing, is foolish. And to pave the roads where gravel will serve the purpose is not only foolish but extravagant.

Iowa has some good gravel roads, and do not let any paving propaganda spreaders tell you otherwise. And while Iowa does need some of its main highways paved, it does not need the thousands of miles of paving that the Good Roads Association and the cement manufacturers are endeavoring to push onto us. Iowa is composed of more than the mud roads of the southern half of the state.

The stage is being properly set for Calvin Coolidge to make his widely heralded entrance into Iowa this summer to spend his vacation. The preliminary entreaties are now being made by Rawson & Company; soon the advance man in the way of Coolidge's representative will call and inspect the proferred quarters at Okoboji. In a couple months, the president and his servants, including plenty of Eastern newspaper correspondents, will be on their way to Iowa amidst gobs of publicity to sojourn for a while in the land of the tall corn. Mr. Rawson, Mr. McNider and other Iowa "farmers" will see that the president gets to view the real Iowa, and learns the true conditions of the nation's food center. Plenty of propaganda will be spread, interviews and articles on the agricultural situation will appear, and the next congress will be presented with a farm bill that will solve the whole trouble to the satisfaction of the East. Perhaps this is a poor guess, but events are shaping that way. Iowa will welcome President Coolidge should he decide to come, but Iowa has little faith that the president comes seeking to learn agriculture's needs and solve its problems. The political effect pushes too strongly to the front to be overlooked, and Iowa has been betrayed so many times it has lost its trusting faith in party platforms and promises. Iowa hopes, but Iowa is keeping its powder dry just the same.

Probably base ball prospects in Belmond are pretty slim this spring, yet we wonder if a home team could not be arranged and a "neighborhood league" formed? Restricting players to home men, forming a small league of neighboring towns and playing a definite schedule of games with each other, we do not see why something shouldn't be done, this spring. With a league composed of home teams from Belmond, Dows, Clarion, Garner, Corwith, and Kanawha interest would be greater than in playing "someone somewhere maybe." We suggest to the baseball fans of the town that they get together before long and talk it over, and see if something can't be done.

"IMPASSABLE"

Reinbeck Courier: We are forced to the conviction that few people understand the meaning of the word "impassable," especially as it is applied to roads. In last Friday's Des Moines Register, in almost a column of road reports the word was used in fourteen instances to inform as to road conditions and in five other places roads were declared to be "almost impassable." We were not on any of those roads and yet we rise to express a doubt as to whether they were really impossible to traverse.

Informants of newspapers biased in favor of paved roads and hotel lobby daredevils who can easily explain a day's idleness by the fact that roads are "impassable" have done all in their power to discredit the gravel roads of the state. We have been met in Waterloo with openeyed wonder at the fact that we had driven there, when as a matter of fact we had made the twenty mile trip in forty-five minutes, surely fast enough for an average traveler. We have taken a fifty mile trip in the face of road reports that forty miles of the road was "impassable" and have gone through without trouble or without chains.

True, frost, snow and weather conditions conspired this year to injure gravelled roads more than the usual amount of spring trouble. True, there have been bad places along almost any gravel road. But these bad places have not been impassable, they have been the cause of slowing up and possible trouble to certain individual drivers. It is true that there may have been places where it was impossible for a car to go thru. We know of only one, under the viaduct on the Third Avenue road and that condition prevailed there only a day or two, about one-tenth the actual length of time that reports would have had us believe.

Let it be written in huge glaring letters that a road is not impassable simply because a car can't go thru it at forty miles an hour. A road, to our mind, isn't even to be considered condemned as impassable because a certain car fails to get thru without horse power. We have been stuck too many times and had another car go through right beside us and we have gone through holes where other cars were stuck too often to consider that all car stoppages of that kind are the fault of the roads.

If the complaints that are being voiced came only from those who had been driving cars but a year or two, it would be understandable. But too often these complaints come from men who have driven cars in Iowa for ten years. Looking back at the first year we ever drove a car we are astonished that the present generation of car drivers finds fault with the roads. They may not have been suitable for pleasure riding this spring, but if a man had to go any place he could get there nearly all the time and the roads were far from impassable.

THE TROUBLE IN CHINA

Algona Republican: It begins to look like a war with China. When warships begin to fire upon the Chinese it can mean little less than war. America has many missionaries, in that and other countries who, no doubt, are making great personal sacrifices and doing much for Christianity. American financiers have also invested many millions in China and other countries. It is doubtful if the trouble started through the missionaries, but evident that John D. Rockefeller, mining corporations and other wealthy industries that have followed in the wake of missionaries are responsible. We wonder what the United States would do if some heathen nation would send over missionaries to teach their religion and try to break down the belief of our ancestors, then their wealth would come in and hesitate to live up to the laws of our nation. It looks like a direct violation of the golden rule when we send warships and soldiers over there. It is perfectly proper to protect the lives of our subjects but when it comes to sending our young men to a foreign country to be killed in order to protect the wealth that has been invested, it does not appeal to us. Our warships and soldiers should protect American interests to the extent of getting every American out of China and let them fight out their own battles. The missionaries should be brought home and kept at home.

MAKING YOUR OWN HAT

There is scarcely an article of sewing on which a woman can save so much money as in making her own hat. Yet a hat has a great deal to do with the appearance of a person, and unless you are sure of your taste you had better get a ready-made one, for the better hats are planned by experts.

If, however, a woman is naturally artistic and gives study to the styles there is no reason why she could not make her own hat. This season is particularly favorable to home-made hats, as so many of them are made of silk, over buckram frames, or entirely soft.

Before deciding on the design of a hat, one should consider what type of hat she needs, whether a "street hat," that is, more on the tailored order, to be worn with suits, for traveling and shopping; or whether one wants it to be worn for more dressy occasions, as to church, an afternoon tea; or is it to be a theatre hat; or for motoring?

The age of the person wearing the hat is a fact to be reckoned with; the size and relation of the hat to the face and neck and style of hair. The effect of the hat front, sides and back, should all be studied. In choosing materials, the color of eyes, hair, and the complexion should be taken into account, as well as the gowns with which it will be worn.

It is a very important matter to determine the artistic proportions of crown and brim, with their relation to the face and size of the wearer, and to one another. An inch on one or the other, like an inch on the end of a man's nose, may make the difference between beauty and a caricature. For this reason it is well to buy a ready-made frame, in which these proportions ares tudied out; or to copy some hat you are sure of.

How much trimming to use, what color and shape, and where to put it on, is a matter requiring thought. The temptation is to over-decorate, to use too much trimming because you have it, and reasoning that if one rose is pretty, two would be prettier.

Metallic and straw braids are popular this year. They may be bought by the yard. With hats made of strips and all sorts of odd shapes of silk, it seems almost as though one could glean the materials from the scrap bag, and have a hat to match a gown, at that.

SHALL WE BUY PACKAGE FOOD?

Package goods have improved the quality of many foods. Crackers are more crisp and fresh and do not taste of some neighboring food, if we buy them in a package; and many other foods are of better quality when they come in packages. The brand is usually printed on the package and, if the husewife like it, she may order more of the same kind. Package goods save handling by workers in the store, whose hands may not always be clean; and they eliminate the danger of petty thefts, as might happen if one orders a quarter's worth of peaches.

There is no doubt of it, however, that bulk goods are usually cheaper than package goods. The package does not always contain a full pound, as one can learn by reading the label but often only twelve or fourteen ounces. When we buy dried beef in glass containers, we pay for the container, the freight on the heavy glass, and the risk of breakage. We get more dried beef for our money if we buy it in the bulk. The same is true of bacon, oatmeal, peanut butter, cheese or any other package goods.

As to cleanliness, though the package is usually packed by machinery, "Untouched by human hands," as the slogan is, yet there may be dirt in it before it was packed and we may find straw in the cereal or a chip in the raisins.

Sometimes poorer qualities are packed in fancy packages and so run off, which would not sell well if open to the view of the shopper. It is not unusual to buy better dates and figs in the bulk than in the package. In buying fruits, the small package is much more expensive than the bulk, as thes mall basket of peaches or tomatoes.

In buying for a family of five or six, it is possible to save almost a dollar a day by buying in the bulk such articles as cheese, bacon, cornmeal, cocoa, dates, crackers and coffee.

Store keepers have learned more about handling foods in the past twenty years, and today they are kept well screened, under glass, covered in boxes and with waxed papers, and are more generally handled with scoops and less with hands .It is comparatively safe to buy bulk foods today, especially those which may be washed or are to be cooked. However, it is important to buy only of grocers who keep clean stores and handle their foods in a sanitary manner.

Though the individual housewife can save money by wise buying of most of her foods in the bulk, yet it would be a backward move to return to the old time store with barrels and cases, rather than the modern one with attractive shelves of neat package goods. The package saves the time of the store-keeper and has its place in the marketing of goods. The package of certain high-grade brands are an assurance of quality and there are some patent brands or special makes which cannot be bought except in the package.

Porch rugs usually get pretty shabby looking by the end of the summer. You will notice it more when you drag them out from their winter storage. They may be freshened by painting with strong dyes.

The Sepoy Mutiny

A FEW pots of grease cost many thousand lives and nearly $200,000,000 in India, about half a century ago, besides inaugurating one of the bloodiest tragedies ever enacted.

India's history, down to the Seventeenth century, is largely a chronicle of barbarism, internecine wars, invasions and Oriental intrigue, with a growing European influence in the most accessible districts. The vast country was teeming with wealth of a sort that attracted Europe's covetous eye. The Portuguese won a commercial foothold there, only to be driven from power by the Dutch, who in time were crowded out by English and French. Last of all, the French were routed by the English, until, by 1760, England practically ruled India. Clive, Warren Hastings, Lord Cornwallis and other governors brought the whole territory either directly or indirectly under British sway.

The natives were untrustworthy. The Indian potentates whose power was checked and a horde of fanatics whose religious rites had been curtailed by the foreign rule were ever stirring up revolt against their new masters. Hence it was necessary to maintain a large army in India. England could not spare a sufficient force of white men for the purpose, so organized native regiments, under British officers, and trained them along European lines. These native troops were called Sepoys (from the Persian word "sipahi," signifying "soldier"), and proved splendidly efficient in repeated campaigns. Thus, by 1856, all India seemed safe and moderately content under British domination. True, there were countless fanatics and unscrupulous native rulers who waited only the opportunity to rebel; but for a long time they lacked the chance. That same "chance" came about in an unforeseen fashion. Like most misfortunes of this sort, it was brought about and then augmented by blunders on the part of the British government.

Several English regiments had been withdrawn from northern and central India to serve in the Crimean war. Others were away in Burmah. These departures left barely eighteen white regiments available for action. Several of the most important arsenals and garrisons were in charge of the Sepoys. At about this time the Enfield rifle was adopted for use among the Sepoys. In loading the rifle it was necessary to bite off the end of the cartridges. These cartridges were coated with grease. They were also packed in glazed paper. The foregoing facts seem mere trifles, yet they brought on a bloody insurrection.

The Sepoy regiments were made up of Mahometans and Buddhists. As the English very well knew, the Buddhists and Mahometans alike are forbidden by the most sacred laws of their religion from eating or even handling pork. At once it was claimed by native rulers, agitators and fanatics that the fat of swine was used in greasing the cartridges and glazing the paper. To this was added the rumor that the government was seeking to force the native troops to embrace Christianity, by making them violate their own creed. At once fanaticism blazed into furious revolt. A devout Christian could not be more indignant at being commanded to stamp on the crucifix than were these Moslem and Hindu devotees at the order to defile their souls by handling and tasting pork-fat. Several Sepoy regiments refused to receive the cartridges, and even rebelled. They were disbanded, and the government tardily "called in" the hated articles of ammunition.

On May 2, 1857, a cavalry regiment was ordered, by error, to bite the greased cartridges, in loading their guns. They refused and were forcibly disarmed. This was the signal for general revolt. At Meerut, a few miles northeast of Delhi, the Sepoys and townsfolk rose together, massacred the British garrison and white residents and marched to Delhi. They captured the latter city and made it the headquarters of the mutiny. The whole Bengal presidency revolted and Europeans were massacred wholesale amid the most unspeakable outrages. Nana Sahib, maharajah of Bithur, loudly proclaimed his loyalty to the government, but at the first opportunity went over to the mutineers. He besieged Cawnpore. On his solemn promise of safe-conduct the garrison at last surrendered. As soon as they were at his mercy he murdered them, massacring 210 English women and children who had sought refuge in the town. Lucknow and other cities garrisoned by the English were besieged, and throughout northern and central India British rule was nearly extinct.

The government at last awoke to the peril. Armies under Havelock, Outram, Campbell and other generals were sent to stamp out the mutiny. Lucknow was relieved when at the last gasp, and within a year the final sparks of insurrection were quenched. Then the British wreaked fearful vengeance on their beaten foes.

The mutiny brought about a radical change in England's mode of ruling her East Indian possessions. In 1876 Benjamin Disraeli, premier of Great Britain, framed the "Royal Titles Act," making Queen Victoria empress of India, and, incidentally, securing for himself the title of earl of Beaconsfield by way of reward

FREE AIR

We must have eaten something that didn't agree with us the other night, because we had the wildest dream afterwards. Seemed as tho we were out riding real early in the morning, about 4:30 or 5:00 o'clock, and passing by Geo. Goelz' place we saw something that fairly made our hair stand on end. There was George out in the garden working like samhillandthensome, putting in a crop of potatoes. His sleeves were rolled up, sweat was pouring down his brow, and the spuds were going into the ground like ducks into a pond. Right behind him was Cato, this early in the morning, covering up the rows and seeming to enjoy it. Sitting on a stump at the edge of the garden was Matt Barry, telling George and Cato how to do it, and beside him was Gene Sullivan. Gene was trying to make a dicker with George to buy the crop for forty dollars, while Geo. Brady was on the other side of the lot waving a fist full of money and offering Goelz $40 in advance.

* * * *

It affected us so terribly we woke up.

* * * *

We sort of figure they'll determine the ownership of that $40 about the time this dream comes true, and if we know the principals concerned in this nightmare, that's gonna be quite some time.

* * * *

Anyway, we've got a city council now and all's quiet on the Iowa, peace and harmony prevails and there's coal enough in the bin to last quite a spell.

* * * *

The Red Light District now has a Red Light Cafe. The proprietor is Mr. Ray Brewer. Now the name chosen is fitting and proper, and the cafe is a pretty snappy little place, but considering the name of the proprietor, we ask you in all fairness if you don't think the place should have been called "The Brewery?"

* * * *

Possibly, however, the name would have been considered misleading, and Mr. Brewer might have been arrested for obtaining money under false pretenses.

* * * *

But boy, it sure would have pulled the trade!

* * * *

* * * *

* * * *

Did you get a baby chick, Monday?

Not for Wine and Beer Candidate

Eldora Ledger: Congressman T. J. B. Robinson is making announcement, through his friends, that he will accept the challenge of Mr. Langworthy, of Dubuque and this early will throw his hat into the ring for his own succession as congressman from the Third Iowa District.

Mr. Robinson is doing quite right to thus accept the challenge thrown out to him by the gentleman from Dubuque county. And he has a lot of boosters who will be glad to hear him make this statement.

Breaking Even

The passerby, seeing a man fishing off the bridge, stopped to chat. "Any luck yet?" he asked, pleasantly. There was no reply, so the passerby edged closer. "Any luck yet?" he repeated. The fisherman withdrew his gaze from the cork bobbing on the water and answered: "No, but I'm holding my own."

AGRICULTURAL NEWS NOTES

COW TEST ASSOCIATIONS GROW

Cow testing association work in Iowa is growing rapidly and farmers thruout the state are becoming interested in checking up on the returns from their dairy herds. Seven new associations in the state began operating April 1, bringing the total up to 83

These new association will extend the benefits of testing to more than 2,000 Iowa farmers. One more association has been organized and will start work May 1, according to the dairy extension specialists of Iowa State College, who have charge of the cow testing association work.

The new associations which started April 1 are in the following counties: Clarke, Hamilton, Wayne, Marion, Delaware and Winneshiek. Adams County has the association which is to start May 1. In five of the counties, the associations starting this spring are the first to be organized there. The Delaware association is the third in the county, while the new Winneshiek association is the second in that county.

DEVISE BASIS TO SCORE FARMS

A score card to rate the efficiency of a farm in the various enterprises has been prepared and is now ready to be mailed out to anyone interested by the Extension Service of Iowa State College. The new score card is based on the averages of 238 farmers in 23 counties, who kept and completed farm business records last year. Any farmer who kept accounts may compare his business on each point with the score card, while others may compare some of the points, such as crop acres tended per horse and per man.

The average return for management last year on these farms was $779, which was the income in addition to interest on the working capital and farm land investment and a wage allowance to the farmer and his family for labor. The interest rates used were the current rates of the state.

While the average farm in this group showed a good profit or management return, the farmers who kept these records do not represent the average farmer in the state, but probably are among the best 10 or 20 percent, the agricultural economists of the college point out.

Even tho the records were undoubtedly kept by some of the state's best farmers, one farm showed a loss of $2,639 the past year, after allowing regular interest rates on farm land and working capital investments and wages for the farmer and his family.

Wide differences were found between the various farms in the efficiency with which enterprises were conducted. For example, the average yield of corn on these farms was 44 bushels, but the best yield was 70 bushels to the acre, and the poorest 12 bushels. Oat yields averaged 35 bushels to the acre, but varied between 5 and 86 bushels.

In livestock production, the efficiency varied widely the average return for each $100 worth of feed fed to livestock was $197 on the 238 farms, but some farmers secured as much as $420, while one farmer got but $82. The total returns per brood sow kept averaged $188, but ranged from $478 down to $32 on the low farm. One farmer saved an average of 11 pigs per sow, while another saved but 2 per sow.

In the dairy enterprises, the average returns per cow were $85, ranging from $250 on the high farm down to $16 on the low farm. The poultry returns per hen varied from 89.37 to 21 cents.

In the use of labor and equipment, the farms varied greatly. On the most efficient farm, 143 crop acres were handled per man, while on the least efficient farm in this regard, only 17 crop acres were handled per man.

STEERS MAY SET NEW RECORD

A new record for average daily gains per steer is in prospect this spring in the feeding experiments at Ames. A group of two-year-old Hereford steers has gained at the rate of 3.94 pounds (almost 4 pounds) each daily for the first three months of the experiment. If they are able to keep up this pace, or even approximate it during the next and final month of the experiment, they will have set a new record for steer gain in the history of the Iowa Agricultural Experiment Station.

The steers are getting a simple mineral mixture composed of high calcium ground limestone, bone meal and potassium iodide, in addition to a ration of full-fed shelled corn, full-fed silage, a liberal allowance of linseed oilmeal, some alfalfa hay and an abundance of salt. The steers are getting 1 ounce per head daily of the minerals.

With the above ration, the steers getting the minerals have gained about a half pound more each daily than have similar steers fed the same except that they got no minerals. The mineral steers have gained a total of 47 pounds each more than the check steers in the first three months of feeding.

The mineral fed steers also will probably out-sell the non-mineral fed steers, in the judgment of John M. Evvard, who directs the experiments.

The results with mineral feeding this year agree with those of past years. An average of the four previous comparisons shows that steers fed minerals out-gained those not getting minerals by practically a fifth of a pound per head daily. Also, the mineral steers have always outsold the others. The average selling price has been 20 cents a hundredweight higher for the mineral fed steers, and in one experiment it was 45 cents.

The margin over feed cost has averaged $3.63 higher for mineral fed steers in the previous experiments. On this basis, the minerals have had a feeding value of about 40 cents a pound for the three simple ingredients, limestone, bone meal and potassium iodide.

The highest gains made in a four months' feeding period at the Iowa Station were recorded in 1916-17, when a group of steers averaged 3.5 pounds each daily. The steers this year will have to gain only 2.17 pounds a day, or a total of 65 pounds each, during the next month to equal the previous record.

The record threatening steers, as well as the other lots on the various rations, will be shown to those who attend the annual Iowa Cattle Feeders' "Hey Day" at Ames, Thursday, May 5.

The Central West Public Service Company has given a mortgage to the First Trust and Savings Bank in Chicago for $4,650,000. The company has telephone lines in 18 Iowa counties and the mortgage must be recorded in each. It is an immense document, covering 151 printed pages. More than $2,000 in revenue stamps are attached to the original instrument. The recording fee prescribed by law is 50c for the first 400 words, and 10c for each 100 words thereafter. The counties involved are Hancock, Carroll, Cerro Gordo, Crawford, Franklin, Lyons, Madison, Sac, Webster, Woodbury, Wright, Union, Osceola, Sioux, Shelby, O'Brien, Warren and Polk.

WHEN SEWING, TRY THESE

Don't baste two straight edges together. Lay them flat on the table and pin every 6 inches, placing the pins head out and at right angles to the edge so that they may be easily removed as one stitches the seam up by machine.

Keep an iron warm when the "garment making" fever strikes, for it hastens the work. Press a French seam after the first stitching, first flat and then on the fold. This will give a neater seam and it will be much less trouble to stitch it. When using bias tape for a binding, press it exactly in the center before applying. When applying a facing, press the first seam open.

Put pockets on or make set-in pockets before starting to sew up seams on dress.

Loops can be bought in various colors for looping a dress together down an opening in the front.

CLOTHING MATERIALS USED

In an effort to determine the best and most economical fabric for use in making children's clothing, the Textile and Clothing Department, Iowa State College, has run a series of laboratory and wearing tests on a large number of materials. In these tests, the materials were actually worn by 76 children in their own homes, in addition to being given a chemical and strength test in the laboratory.

It was found that the everfast and year-round suitings gave the best wear of any of the materials tested. They were a little heavy to launder, but were usually fast in color. Peter Pan gingham also proved very satisfactory as to wear; fast in color and lighter in weight than the suitings. It laundered easily and can be bought in almost every color. It costs between 50 and 60 cents per yard and is nice enough for small children to wear anywhere, according to Miss Katherine Cranor, Home Economics Division. The Peter Pan ginghams shrink considerably, Miss Cranor says, but all cotton materials should really be shrunk before they are made up.

Figured percale, which is only 29 cents per yard, was found to wear well, wash nicely and is fast in color. Printed galateas also proved to be excellent for hard wear. They faded slightly, but not enough to spoil their appearance. The khaki colored, as a rule, faded more than the figured. The tests showed that in general brown in any wash material should be avoided, as it is not usually as fast as some other colors. It is possible to get everfast materials in the cotton crepes. These are eaily laundered and require no ironing, which is a great saving of time and strength to the housewife, according to Miss Cranor.

FITTING THE HOUSE FOR SUMMER

To remove the heavy drapes, cover the over-stuffed furniture, and pack away everything warm looking, is the best way to make the house seem cooler for summer. It will also make it seem larger and more restful—to have many of the dodads cleared away.

The housewife can provide a sort of vacation for herself by storing away many ornamental pieces, such as silver, sofa cushions and dust-catchers. This will make it easier to keep the house clean for summer. The fact that the family will spend most of their time out-doors is a consideration. When winter comes, you will enjoy your bric-a-brac all the more, if you have not had it around for awhile.

Windows may be made to look airy by the use of filmy white curtains with figures of blue or green. Smaller rugs make a room look cooler than the large rugs do.

STORING THE HEAVIES

Before storing away the blankets and the woolen garments, clean them thoroughly. Moths attack soiled spots first. It is a good stunt to have your winter coats dry-cleaned in the spring, sealed in moth-proof bags, and hung away for the summer. They will usually need cleaning in the fall anyway, and that is too late, from the moth standpoint.

Cedar saw dust, napthalene flakes or balls and many other moth repellant preparations are on the market to be sprinkled in the trunks in which you store the winter clothes. But you must be sure there are no moths in the things you store away, for these mal-odorous chemicals are merely repellant; they do not kill moths nor prevent new ones from hatching out.

Every garment should be well sunned and aired before being stored away. Pockets should be turned wrong side out. Things hung on the line outdoors should be brought in two hours before sunset, as moths seek their night's quarters early, and might lodge in some of those very things you are airing. Blankets and everything which can be laundered should be so treated before they are packed away.

THE GRADUATION GOWN

Many a young heart is already picturing herself on the commencement platform, all filmy and white in her graduation dress. How fine it would be if a part of the final examinations, for every sweet girl graduate, included the planning and making of her own graduation outfit, and if the standard of excellence were the most lovely and attractive garments from the simplest materials and least expensive outlay. This would represent the completion of a really worthwhile stage of education.

The graduation gown should be chosen, not only for its beauty on the commencement occasion, but for its after service. It can supply a dainty white dress for the summer season, and white will be especially popular this summer.

MORE CORN PER ACRE

TILE DRAINAGE will give you more corn per acre from the same labor and other expense you are now putting into your smaller yields.

Because—

1. The soil dries out and warms up quicker so you can plant earlier.
2. The seed sprouts quicker, and the plants grow faster.
3. The roots grow deeper, as is shown in the above picture which is redrawn from an actual photograph.
4. The soil is better ventilated, and warmer, so that the soil bacteria prepare more food for the use of the plants.
5. The roots draw from a larger storehouse of fertility, and so can produce more grain per acre.
6. The roots have access to a larger reservoir of useful moisture, and so withstand a longer summer dry spell.
7. The ground dries out quicker, and the plants grow faster, after each rainstorm.
8. The crop grows more days in a given season, and grows faster each of those days.

Grow corn for one cent a bushel

CORN growers by the hundreds are now adding from five to ten bushels per acre to their yield at a cost of only five cents an acre.

A new seed corn treatment has made these astonishing results possible. The explanation is simple. Disease reduces your corn yields many bushels annually. This new seed corn treatment protects the seed from disease organisms on the seed and in the soil—and allows the seed to germinate and grow unmolested. Seed that is not treated is forced to fight the rots and molds which cause poor germination, "down" corn, root and stalk rots. And you lose bushels that should be dollars in your pocket.

Makes Poor Seed Good

This treatment insures germination and sturdy growth never before possible from poor seed. Even selected seed is benefited by the treatment because of the protection it is given against the injurious and costly attacks of soil-infesting diseases.

Tested by U. S. Dept. of Agric.

Extensive tests by the U. S. Department of Agriculture show that the BAYER DUST treatment of nearly disease-free Dent corn gave an increase of 8.5 bushels per acre; of Diplodia infected seed, 15.8 bushels; and of Gibberella infected seed, 28.9 bushels. Phytopathology, January, 1926.

Costs but a Few Cents per Acre

You need no special equipment for this new seed treatment. No tiresome or lengthy procedure is involved. Two bushels of seed can be treated in less than three minutes. And the cost is less than 5c per acre.

Bayer seed treatment comes in two forms: BAYER DUST for Dust treatment and USPULUN for Soak treatment. Most growers prefer the Dust treatment because it is quicker and saves the trouble of drying the seed. Both are equally effective.

Increases Your Profits

BAYER DUST or USPULUN pay their small cost many times over because they:

Permit earlier planting.
Prevent soil decay.
Increase germination.
Prevent seedling blight, root and stalk rot.
Reduce the amount of "down" corn.
Increase the yield.
And bring greater profits.

TRY THIS HOME TEST ON YOUR SEED CORN

Prove the value of this treatment to your own satisfaction before the planting season. Today, get a 50c tin of BAYER DUST or USPULUN from your dealer. Select 50 kernels of corn at random from your seed corn. Treat 25 seeds and plant them in a cigar box or flower pot. Plant 25 untreated seeds in a similar container. Then watch them grow. The results will amaze you.

One pound of either treats six bushels of seed corn

Bayer Dust: 4 oz. 50c; 1 lb. $1.75; 5 lbs. $8.00. Uspulun: 2 oz. 50c; 1 lb. $2.75; 5 lbs. $13.00

If your dealer's stock of BAYER DUST and USPULUN has not yet arrived, send us his name and address.

JOHANNA SUNTKEN

The home of Mr. Henry Suntken, living north of Alexander, was saddened when the Angel of Death took from their midst their little daughter, Johanna. Although strong and always healthy, she took ill a little before a week of her death. Sunday preceding her death she was taken to the Park hospital at Mason City where she submitted to an operation on the following day for spinal menengitis and mastoid, but gradually grew weaker until the end came on Saturday morning, April 16, 1927. She was born on September 27, 1919 and was seven years, five months and twenty days of age at the time of her death.

Funeral services were held on Tuesday afternoon, April 19, 1927 at 1:00 o'clock at the family home and were continued in the Alexander Reformed church and interment was made in the local cemetery and were in charge of Rev. Frerichs, and were largely attended.

She leaves to mourn her loss her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Suntken, two brothers, Onno and Bert, two sisters, Aleida and Grace, besides other relatives and many friends. Johanna was a faithful member of the Sunday School and she will be missed by the school.

Card of Thanks

We herewith wish to express our hearty thanks to our neighbors and friends who showed us many acts of kindness and sympathy during the illness and death of our beloved daughter and sister; also for the many beautiful floral offerings and the singing of the quartet at the services. May the Lord bless you all!

Henry Suntken and Family.

MRS. ROBERT GOBELI

Mrs. Robert Gobeli died at the Bowlder Sanitarium at Fort Dodge Wednesday morning, April 20th, of tuberculosis.

Mrs. Robert Gobeli, nee Lela Carter, was born at Persia, Tennesee, September 8th, 1899, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Carter. She was born and raised on her parents farm and received her education in the schools at Persia. Early in life she joined the Baptist church where she was a consistent and a faithful member and found great comfort in her religion during the latter months of her illness.

On December 31st, 1922, she was united in marriage to Mr. Robert Gobelei and came to Iowa to make her home. To this union two children were born, an infant preceding her in death, and her little three-year-old son, James Frederick survives her. Besides her husband and son she is survived by her parents and four brothers and five sisters, and other immediate relatives.

Deceased was always more or less frail in health and last October it was found advisable to take her to the sanitarium in an effort to benefit her health, but the grim hand of death won the struggle and ended her comparatively young life of only twenty-eight years.

Funeral services were held at the G. Gobelei home in Klemme on Sunday afternoon at 1:00 o'clock p. m., and the remains were then taken to the Evangelical church at Meservey, where her pastor, Rev. A. K. Henning conducted services beginning at 2:30 o'clock. Interment was made in the Meservey cemetery.

The sincere sympathy of the entire community is extended to the bereaved relatives at this time.

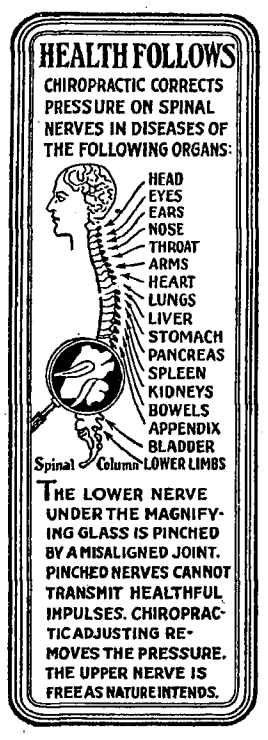
What Is Disease, Anyway?

We live in an age which demands brevity of speech. Because this has found expression in a series of names, each of which denotes a specific collection of symptoms of human ills, we are apt to lose sight of the fact that "disease" simply means dis-ease.

Worse than that, we seldom stop to consider that widely varying manifestations of dis-ease may, and do, spring from a single cause, and as a result there is too much treatment of symptoms—too little correction of causes.



The cause of most dis-ease is spinal interference with the flow of vital energy from the brain, through the nerves, to various organs. In the case of Mrs. Samuel a simple interference created symptoms indicating four distinct and serious "diseases." Spinal adjustments led to the disappearance of them all.

ALMOST EVERYTHING WAS WRONG

"In February, 1922, my wife had a general nervous breakdown, kidney trouble and high blood pressure. She was unable to do anything—just gave up and felt she would never be any better. We called a medical doctor, who said she had leakage of the heart and must be very quiet. She got no better and was advised to try a chiropractor. After several adjustments she was somewhat better. She continued to improve, became able to do her work, and was dismissed in October, 1922. We cannot praise Chiropractic too highly." Mr. Samuel, Chiropractic Research Bureau, Statement No. 2112-M.

THE STORY

CHAPTER I.—With a stranger, whom he introduces as his nephew, Ned Carter, Claude Melnotte Dabbs returns from New York to his general grocery at Peace Valley, Pa. To "Aunt Lyddy," his housekeeper, he explains that Carter is a chance acquaintance, veteran of the World war, whom he had met and taken a liking to.

CHAPTER II.—Carter tells Aunt Lyddy he has broken with his family and his sweetheart because of his resentment of their ultra pacific tendencies. With Dabbs Ned visits Clover Hollow, abiding place of a "collection of good-natured cranks," according to the grocer. They almost run over a dog belonging to a girl whom Carter apparently recognizes. Ned delivers a grocery order, and in his absence the girl, Dorothy Selden, reveals that she knows him to be Ned Carter Rangeley, son of Loren Rangeley, New York banker.

CHAPTER III.—Next day Ned commences work as a "grocer's boy." At a residence, the "White House," he delivers an order marked "Johnston." There he meets a girl who tells him she and her mother are alone in the house, the servants having left them because of the "loneliness." He promises to try to procure household help. Meeting Dorothy Selden, his erstwhile sweetheart, he baffles her attempts to discover the reason for his presence in Peace Valley. Arrangement is made for a cook to go to the Johnstons'.

CHAPTER IV.—The cook being unable to begin work at once, Ned visits the White House to inform Miss Johnston of the fact. Explaining the situation to her mother, the girl, "Mary," is astonished by that lady's emotion at the mention of Dabbs' name. The cook arrives, and Mary, with Ned, goes to the village for groceries. They are seen by Dorothy Selden. Mrs. Johnston, worried over financial troubles, is bothered by Dorothy, who warns her there is something suspicious about Ned Carter.

CHAPTER V.—There is something about Mary vaguely familiar to Dabbs, and he is highly interested in village gossip concerning the mother and daughter. Mrs. Johnston accompanies Mary to an inn for luncheon. Dabbs sees Mrs. Johnston and is obviously perturbed. He informs Ned he has something on his mind that he would like to tell him.

CHAPTER VI.—Claude reveals to Ned a romance of his early life. He had married, while at college, and under peculiar circumstances, and his wife left him the day after the ceremony. He is convinced "Mrs. Johnston" is his wife, "Polly," and naturally wants to know, Who is Mary?

CHAPTER VII.—Mrs. Johnston tells Mary they are practically penniless, through a trustee's defalcation. She plans an appeal to Loren Rangeley, her banker, and Mary endeavors to dissuade her. While with Ned, Mary falls into a pool. Ned gets her out, unhurt, but the incident reveals to him the real nature of his feelings toward the girl.

CHAPTER VIII.—In an attempt to clear up the situation, Dabbs sends Mrs. Johnston $500, which he had from her when they were married. She keeps the money, satisfying Dabbs she is his wife, but, Who is Mary? Mrs. Johnston and her daughter go to New York, on Dabbs' money. Dabbs tells Ned he knows he is Rangeley's son, and the two men arrange to follow the women. "Polly" informs Loren Rangeley she and Mary are going to Europe.

CHAPTER IX.—Mrs. Johnston tells her daughter something of her early life and poverty, and acknowledges that Dabbs is Mary's father. The girl is pleased, declaring she likes Dabbs.

CHAPTER X.—Claude, at a meeting with Mary, is overjoyed when the girl gladly acknowledges their relationship. He has for some time been convinced the girl is his daughter. She tells him she and her mother are sailing to Europe next day. Dabbs promises to meet Mary there. She tells him her mother is in financial straits, but declines his offer of pecuniary assistance, believing him a comparatively poor man.

CHAPTER XI

Mary marveled that she was able to conceal from her mother the exciting fact that she had met and talked to her father. It seemed to her quite impossible that she could sit beside her mother, and think about her father, and her mother suspect nothing and think—well, Mary did not quite know what Mother was thinking about.

For the first time in her life Mary realized that souls could be lonely. People could be as close as Mother and she had always been, and yet so wide apart that when one deliberately drew down the curtain, the other sat in darkness and could know nothing of the thoughts and feelings behind the curtain!

Claude's heart and head were full of Mary. She occupied his thoughts to the exclusion of everything else. So absorbed was he in his own visions, that Ned, returning in triumph from a successful visit to the steamship office, for the first time in their acquaintance was at odds with Claude. His indignation was roused by the news that Claude had actually had Mary there, in the hotel, and yet had said nothing at all about Ned. As though that were not enough, Claude calmly demanded that he transfer their reservation to the next ship, sailing a few days later.

It had been a difficult matter for him to obtain passage on the same boat with the Johnstons and now these efforts were in vain.

When the change had been made Ned asked: "Why didn't you tell Miss Johnston I was in town?"

"Because I forgot you, and everything else, Ned. All I could think of was that Mary is my own girl and nothing that Polly does will keep me away from Mary—when she wants me."

Ned's feeling of exasperation gradually gave way to the thought that in reality Claude had done him a good turn. By not mentioning him to Mary, Claude had saved the explanation that he was not Carter, but Ned Carter Rangeley. Moreover, there would be no need, if they traveled on different ships, for her to know it until they met. There are some explanations that should come from the lover. This was one. Mary still believed him the grocer's clerk.

The next morning Ned determined that, by hook or crook, he would have speech with Mary before the steamer sailed. He could easily get on board, and the chances were that he would be able to have a word alone.

He became aware that Claude was regarding him steadily across the breakfast table.

"Far be it from me, Ned, to worm myself into any business of yours, but if you should be thinking of looking up Mary before she sails, my advice is—Don't!"

"What's wrong with the idea, supposing I entertained it?"

"Everything," said Claude, all the kindness gone from the blue eyes. "It's a bad idea. It would mess up my plans. If necessary, I'm prepared to rope and tie you, to prevent it."

He leaned across the table, his eyes growing soft again: "Why boy, can't you see? There's some women you can rush, and others you've gotta let run a little before you throw the rope. Of course, I haven't been so successful in my own affair that I should set up for a guide, but I know about Mary. If I were you—I wouldn't."

"Enough said," Ned quickly agreed. "But once over the water, C. M., I'll play my game without interference."

Claude's caution prevented Ned meeting his father. Loren Rangeley bade Mrs. Johnston an impressive farewell. He carried himself so paternally toward Mary that only her fear of antagonizing her mother prevented her from raging aloud against him.

The same jealousy, in a different degree, prevented Mrs. Johnston from telling Mary of Ned's message. The sight of his flowers, a modest bunch of violets chosen as befitting a grocer's clerk, annoyed her still further. It was not until New York harbor was well behind them that Mary was told.

Something in the way her mother gave the message, with the inference that Carter was a pushing, obnoxious creature, made Mary place his flowers conspicuously in the stateroom.

All this Mrs. Johnston received in silence, and Mary, sore at heart, could not understand it. After all, they were Americans and her mother had never been a snob. What could have made her take this attitude toward a perfectly nice young man who had saved her daughter's life? Mary decided not to blame her mother at all, but to put the blame on that detestable Mr. Rangeley, who had probably been quite difficult.

Why had her mother borrowed from him? Surely things might have been arranged with less haste. There seemed something inherently unjust to C. M. Dabbs in this wild desire to escape.

Just or unjust, she could not question her mother. Mrs. Johnston's face was set and worried, and though it changed a moment after to smiles and graciousness, as an old acquaintance greeted her, Mary remembered that anxious look. If her mother had promised to consider that awful Rangeley, Mary would have to warn her father.

Polly told Mary nothing, and Mary danced, walked, talked, played games, flirted a little, stayed in bed and read when she grew tired of everybody on board ship.

Polly's routine was much the same, save that she spent more time in bed reading feverishly and without discrimination. They talked in the usual jolly, casual way at night. But certain subjects were avoided—Clover Hollow, Claude Dabbs, Ned Carter and Loren Rangeley.

Just three days behind them, on the same course, Claude Dabbs and Ned Carter followed. Ned was finding Claude a delightful traveling companion, utterly free from the shame of ignorance, and willing to acquire knowledge of all sorts. Ned also discovered that others found Claude attractive, and Ned even accused Claude of being too popular.

A curiously congenial pair they were, finding an infinite variety of things to talk about. They seldom mentioned Mary, and Ned wanted to talk about Mary. He had reached the stage when if the beloved's name is not mentioned by some one, there is no conversation. Some one, any one, every one must speak of her to him.

Claude, a charming companion in every other respect, was, on the one vital subject, dumb.

Ned fumed, in secret, knowing that with Claude Dabbs all half-measures were useless; he would either have to declare his whole purpose, or keep silent. Since he knew nothing yet of Mary's feelings, he kept silent.

He wished, heartily, that Claude and his Polly would play out their comedy by themselves and leave him a clear field with Mary. Mary in Venice! The combination would be heavenly, but not if everywhere that Mary went a mother and father, utterly estranged, followed.

As their journey brought them closer to Mary, the two men communed in their hearts with the totally different images they had set up of the same girl.

The real and very different Mary—in that instead of only being what they thought, was all that and more—slept as tranquilly as an Italian railway carriage would permit.

As the time drew near when she might reasonably expect her father to appear, Mary thought of nothing else, and grew nervous lest she should betray, in some unguarded speech, the thoughts that were uppermost in her mind.

Polly Johnston steadily refused to disclose her plans to Mary. Polly's nights were sleepless, her days restless. It was as though she felt some approaching change and strove to evade it.

Several wakeful nights followed their arrival in Venice, and one morning Polly awoke with a headache. Though she kept up valiantly until after luncheon, she was compelled finally to seek her darkened bedroom. Mary knew that Polly could not endure being read or talked to when her head was like that. So, when Mary proposed that she should spend the afternoon in St. Mark's, just around the corner, there was no excuse Polly could justly offer to oppose the plan, though she did not like it.

Mary laughed down all suggestions that she was quite too attractive to wander about alone. Mary was an American, though she had had a foreign bringing-up, and she reminded her mother of this, and that she knew how to take care of herself.

Polly, who had wandered about as she chose when Mary's age, realized she was being absurd.

She told Mary to go, but not to stay late, and if she, Polly, did not feel better, she would have her dinner in bed. In that case Mary might dine with the Farleys, whom they had met on the train. Mary acquiesced, somewhat absent-mindedly. Having made her mother comfortable, or at least as comfortable as a headache would allow, Mary set forth.

Venice, that lovely city of the sea, seemed to Mary to be looking her best that afternoon. The sun shone warm on the piazza. The shops had a sleepy look, their awnings like drooping eyelids, and the patches of shade were grateful to the eye. Mary thought Venice was like a lovely, seductive woman, who, past her first youth, stirred men's hearts to pity for all she had lost, and then to passion for the ageless beauty which she still retained.

Mary had made brief visits to St. Mark's with her mother, but now she hurried up the steep stone stairs toward the galleries and the capello di oro. A service was in progress before one of the altars.

Mary paused a moment to fee the genial old custodian, whose greeting was as toothless as it was friendly. As she stood peering down into the dim church, she was conscious of some one near her, watching her. She looked up—into Ned Carter's eyes.

She could scarcely believe it, and yet something she read in his eyes made her stretch out her hand. Ned grasped it, and that steadied her. She thought she heard him murmur "Mary." She was not sure. She turned, confusedly, her hand still unaccountably in his, and they went through the doorway that led to the golden horses. It was so narrow here that quite naturally she recovered her hand. As they stepped out into the sunshine, and the cool sea breeze, Mary felt herself able to face Ned.

To her conscious amazement, she found this no easy thing to do. There was a shining something in his eyes, to which she seemed loathe to give a name, or to fully recognize. There was so much confusion in her mind, thoughts half formed flitting across it like birds of the night, that she finally left it to Ned to break the silence. All he seemed able to say was "Mary!"

"Are you here," Mary began desperately, "with my—"

Ned gave a swift look about to assure himself that they were alone.

"Oh, what does it matter who I am with? I'm here because you are here, and I couldn't stay in Clover Hollow without you. I've followed you, Mary, to tell you—"

"Hush!" said Mary warningly, and put her finger gently against his lips, for out of the little doorway had appeared the wondering heads of a German youth of about twenty, and his bride.

Mary moved away, seated herself on the stone parapet beneath the horses and looked out over the piazza. Ned stood beside her, looking down.

"My father—" she began.

"Yes, I came here with C. M. Dabbs, and I know where he is, but I'm not to meet him for half an hour yet. Surely you can listen to me for that length of time. If you don't," he threatened, "I won't tell you where to find him. If you're kind to me, I'll lead you to him."

"Mr. Carter, aren't you a little sudden in your methods?"

"I'm anything you like except 'Mr. Carter.' And if I seem sudden, look at the provocation. At a certain shop your father is waiting, and once he gets within hailing distance I'll be pushed, shoved, ignored or kicked into the background. So, Mary—No you don't, my dear. There's absolutely no use in our roaming around looking at things in shop windows. Down this alley-way there's a flight of stone steps leading to the canal. If you come that way, we could wait in the shade for a gondola."

"To take me to father?"

"Eventually, yes," admitted Ned, "but primarily to listen to me."

"About father? Oh, I should love to hear about him!"

"Would you? Well, I've lots to tell. A wonderful traveling companion. But first you must hear about me."

They had reached one step and while Ned signaled a passing gondola, Mary thought of him and wondered at herself. Why should she go with him? Mother would never approve of this! Nevertheless, she waited for his gondola and listened to him with a smile. It was like walking into a trap, but was she so unwilling to be caught?

She had one wild impulse toward flight as Ned concentrated his attention upon getting the gondola ready for his lady. It would be so easy to slip away now. As she made the first step his hand was on her arm, very gently but compellingly, and she had stepped into the gondola.

They sat side by side for a few moments in silence as the gondola made its way into the Grand canal. Then Ned turned to her and spoke about Venice, its sudden and unexpected charm for him when he had first seen the city. He loved it. This lazy method of locomotion was perfect. Did she not think so? Mary could rhapsodize with him over Venice to his heart's content, and began to think she had been fearful without cause.

They had turned from the Grand canal into a narrower, half-deserted looking waterway, quite evidently leading to the private entrance of several old palaces. Over the wall of one streamed green branches and creepers, the remains of an old garden, once hidden from the public eye. The canal was beautiful, and dark with shade. Here and there long splashes of sunlight stole between thick walls and made bars across the water.

"I knew you'd love it. I've always planned to bring the girl I—some day I meant to bring—Mary, I've kept it for you. Isn't it lovely?"

Before Mary could reply, her hand was crushed in his, his shoulder was against her own and his lips close to her ear were murmuring, so that she alone could hear all that he longed to tell her. It was extremely jerky and incoherent. In fact, there was very little sense in it. It was rather like what every man does with his preconceived idea of how he is going to conduct his love scene. Ned, being very much in love, made a bad botch of it. In fact, the astonished Mary could not distinguish anything except that she was disturbing the even tenor of his life considerably, that she was adorable, and—though everything was implied that should have been implied there was not a single word about marriage or engagement. Most of it was "Oh, Mary!"

They were approaching the old bridge. The bridge, low and dark, seemed to Mary the proper place to arrest the stream of Ned's eloquence. She determined to release her hand. It did not seem easy. She tried it, however, and turned her face so that she might look at him and make him understand. As she turned, the lips so close to her ear brushed her cheek, met her mouth and clung there.

It was the first time—for Mary. Other men had tried to kiss her mouth, just as other men had asked her to marry them, but none had succeeded.

When the gondola shot from under the bridge into the sunlight, the gondolier, who of course must have suspected, if he had not seen, burst out into one of his cries of warning that precede a turning. Ned involuntarily straightened up, came out of his dream and looked guiltily at Mary.

Mary was furious. Her cheeks flamed. She felt her whole body was one burning blush. She hated him. It was as though he had kissed her in the open street. But she hated herself more, for even while she blushed to remember his lips, she had a horrible suspicion that she would like to be kissed again.

CHAPTER XII

How can a man apologize for kissing a lady? It's not done. One either goes on, or leaves off, and if circumstances or places compel one to leave off abruptly, then surely the lady should understand.

Ned, who had kissed several on the way to Mary, was completely at a loss. None of them had taken it just like this; grown red, then silent, and refused to meet his eyes. He would not have cared if they had, but he did care now. He made one or two attempts at speech, but the shoulder shrank from his, the hand refused to be held, and the face remained averted.

The high gods, who love a lover, saw his plight and gave Ned the only words that could help him.

"I'm not sorry. But I am sorry you take it like this."

"Grocer's boy," finished Ned. "I suppose that's why you feel insulted."

The colored marble he had been sitting beside for the last few moments, returned to life. "Ned Carter! You know it wasn't that. Naturally I resented you—" but the voice stopped abruptly and the blue eyes had a haze of tears.

Ned gathered up the limp hand again, very gently, and kept his eyes fixed on the water of the sluggish canal. "What am I to do? How are you to know that I am mad about you, unless I tell you? And how can you know whether you like kissing me, unless I try it?"

"You're outrageous; I know nothing about you, and to—oh—in a gondola—in broad daylight!"

Ned's laugh echoed across the canal. "Oh, Mary, I adore you. How long will it take you to learn that by heart? I'll say it all over again, tonight, and in the darkest corner of Venice."

"You will not get a chance. You will please land now, and take me to my father."

"If I do, will you think about me?"

"Oh, yes, I'll think about you," and with that Ned had to be content.

"Mary, your father's very fond of me."

"That's the one thing I know in your favor."

"If you ask Claude Dabbs, he will tell you all about me."

"I shall not ask my father."

This being exceedingly satisfactory to Ned, he went on a few steps in silence, glancing down at the adorable hat this loveliest of ladies wore. It was faced with blue that matched her eyes. He wished she would look up.

"How are you to know—if you do not ask?"

She looked up, and down again quickly. "Oh, I shall know."

"If you leave it to your heart," he murmured close to her ear, "I shall be satisfied."

"If my father were not standing there watching us," said Mary in the same conversational tone, "I would slap you, good and hard."

She left him and went forward eagerly to greet Claude. He came as eagerly to meet his girl, and Ned found himself very much out of the picture. The girl, who had been hard to him, was very sweet and daughterly to Claude. It was Claude who kindly held Ned within the charmed circle, and Mary who made him feel out of touch.

All the rest of that lovely afternoon Mary wandered about with the two men who loved her. It was agreed between Mary and Claude Dabbs that if Polly kept to her room that night, Mary should contrive to dine with him. She could, without actually telling a fib, she assured Claude, allow her mother to suppose that she was dining with the Farleys, and Mrs. Farley was a dear and would understand if Mary told her at the last minute that she was dining with friends. She would telephone from her hotel and Claude could come and take her to his, and bring her back.

With this they had to be content. They parted from Mary before they reached the entrance to her hotel.

Polly's headache was better, but she decided not to get up. When Mary came into her room, ready to go to dinner, Polly was sitting up in bed, a tray before her.

"My word, Mary, you look sweet. Turn around and let me see if I'll like you as well when you leave the room as I do when you come in.

"The Farleys ought to appreciate you, Mary. Is young Farley to be there tonight? If his mother knew we were poor it might make a difference, you know."

Then what is it, her mother thought, that makes her look just that way? It must be a man!

"Anyone interesting among the new arrivals?"

"I don't know," Mary answered honestly. "I'll look them over when I go down, and report."

She kissed her mother and hurried away.

Polly rested back against her pillows and sighed. How long could she keep Mary? Not very long, if the men of this generation were at all like those of the last. Well, at any rate Claude should not have her. Mary must have her chance and not be dragged back to a village grocery store—the same one from which her mother had fled so many years ago.

Mary explained to Mrs. Farley, having first telephoned Claude, that she was dining with an old friend.

Mrs. Farley, who had no daughters and adored Mary, watched with interest Mary's meeting with a big, dark, middle-aged man, who looked rather distinguished.

Mary thought her father looked stunning. It was frightfully romantic, she told him, eloping with one's father in a gondola.

"You wouldn't even look at me if Mother were here in all her glory. Mother is—oh, Father, Mother is a perfect peach!"

"There was a poet, long ago, who put what I feel about Polly in a nutshell," Claude answered. "It was something about: 'If she isn't my peach, I don't care how peachy she is.'"

"Father! Stop! Don't murder, 'If she be not fair for me, What care I how fair she be.'"

"That's it. Just at this minute Polly leaves me cold and I wouldn't look at her tonight, not so long as I had you to myself."

"Father, that can't be true. It must not be. Because I've set my heart on making Mother—look at you."

Claude Dabbs laughed, and put his big hand over Mary's little one. "Just you listen to me, my Mary, and let Polly alone. The devil himself couldn't make Polly look at me."

"Wait and see. Maybe what the devil can't do, Mary can."

But Claude was saying: "I'm to have you for tonight, daughter, and tomorrow, if there's anything to be done, toward making Polly 'look at me.'" He changed the subject, keeping Mary busy teaching him Italian words to say to the waiters and the gondoliers.

Ned, not for a moment suggesting a grocery background, was waiting at the landing. His eyes made Mary happy, furious and shy. It was ridiculous, but she could not seem to help it.

The dinner, whether owing to Ned or Claude—Mary could not really tell which, they both seemed so eminently competent—was delicious. Their table was decorated with flowers, which always seem doubly rare and precious in Venice. Her two men, Mary felt, were the most distinguished in the room. The two men were equally sure that she was the most attractive girl in the world.

After dinner, and coffee in the lounge, they went up to Claude's sitting room to talk and smoke. It was a happy evening. In the presence of his daughter, Claude was at his best. Ned, reveling in the fact that Mary was noting every shade of her father's feeling for him, drew Claude out for his daughter's sake.

When "the loveliest evening," as Mary told her father, was over and Cinderella-Mary must fly home, Ned remembered that Claude had never once called him Rangeley that evening! What a night and a moon to explain under!

He hinted, eagerly, that he was ready to take upon his shoulders the duty of seeing Mary home, suggesting that it would be safer for both Mary and Claude. Mary simply slipped her hand into her father's and looked at him. Ned's arguments were as nothing.

"Mary, Was It Claude Who Told You to Keep Me in Ignorance?"

"I guess we'll risk that, my boy, if Mary wants me," said Claude.

Ned stood on the landing steps and watched them move away. Mary had agreed to meet Claude at the Accademia at three the next afternoon. As Claude turned to direct the gondolier, Ned had whispered:

"Come twenty minutes earlier—for me."

But as the gondola floated away, he wasn't sure that Mary had heard him.

When she had said good night, at the doorway of the Royal Danielli, Mary found it was later than she thought and with a little apprehensive feeling went directly to her own room.

There was a light still burning in Polly's room, and reluctantly Mary opened the door between their rooms and looked in.

One of the most enjoyable occasions of the year was the party given by the ladies to the men of the Congregational Sunday school last Friday evening. A very unique feature of the entertainment was a list of 22 conumdrums, the answer of which would be the name of some member of the classes. We were given ten minutes to solve them, and prizes were given for the most correct answer. We were then entertained at progressive games until time for refreshments. The lunch was very fine and greatly enjoyed by all. The men gave the ladies a vote of thanks for the entertainment, and all went away thinking it is good for us to be here. ***

To the Patrons of the Banks of Wright County:

A bank within a community is no longer a private business enterprise but a community affair. Its success has such a far reaching influence upon the financial welfare of those within its vicinity that its interests are mutual with those of every citizen who resides within its territory.

For this reason that which affects the success of a bank affects all and as such is of vital interest to the public.

It is a fact that a bank cannot give the service and safety in its affairs to which patrons are entitled, unless its business is conducted upon a basis which returns a fair margin of profit to the bank.

For this reason patrons have within their power to increase or diminish the service which they are to receive from their bank precisely to the extent to which they give or withhold their co-operation.

Particularly is this true in the matter of checking accounts. The checking account privilege is probably the most expensive service a bank offers, entailing as it does the purchase of bank-books, check-books, deposit slips, checks, etc., as well as the cost of bookkeeping in connection with the accounts.

The only profit a bank receives from these accounts is the interest it receives from loaning the money deposited with it, but the amount it can loan is small. Good banking requires the bank to keep a large part of these deposits in reserve. If the depositor constantly checks out all or nearly all his balance each month, there is none to loan and the bank can make no profit on the account with which to pay the expense of handling it.

Careful investigation has proven that to cover the cost of an account a balance must be maintained of at least $50 each month over and above the amount that is checked out at any time. The Wright County Bankers Association has therefore adopted a resolution that, after April 1st, 1927, any checking account which fails to average $50 for the month will be charged 50 cents for the checking service.

If a checking account is essential it is suggested that the balance be increased to $50 and maintained as a permanent balance, which will cover the cost of handling the account. Those few who find it impossible to maintain a permanent balance of $50, and do not wish to pay this service fee, are invited to transfer their accounts to a Cashier's Check, or Savings Account, where their funds will receive the same certain safety and can be withdrawn at will in lump sums as needed, but not by check.

This charge has not been instituted with the idea of collecting 50 cents per month on the small accounts but with the hope that it will call the depositors' attention to the fact that they are carrying small balances, and to induce them to increase their balances to a point where they will cover the actual cost of handling the accounts.

Please co-operate so that your bank may do everything within its power to make your business relations with it of the greatest possible value to you.

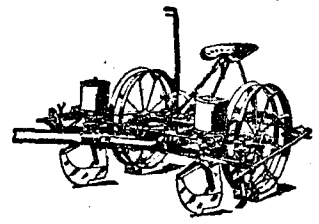
ABOUT YOUR

Corn Planter

The reason for using a corn planter is to save time. It would be better though to plant your corn by hand rather than to use a machine which would not give you an accurate job of planting. Too many kernels in a hill often times provides more plants than the fertility of the soil will mature and if you do not get enough kernels in a hill you are not taking full advantage of the fertility of your soil. You lose in either case.



If the corn planter you are using misses two kernels out of every one hundred it should plant, you lose 213 ears or 1.92 bushels per acre. If your planter misses five kernels out of one hundred you are losing 532 ears, or 4.8 bushels. You can see from these figures that an inaccurate planter soon loses you the entire profit on an acre of corn.

Often times your fields are more fertile in one part than another so that you can to advantage plant three or four kernels in a hill in some places where in other places you would want only three or two. The planter you use should be such a machine as will enable you to make this change instantly and still maintain accuracy.

Your land may be in such condition that you would want to add some fertilizer and it should not be necessary for you to make a separate operation of this fertilizer distribution. A good planter will enable you to do this at the same time you plant your corn.

Last year Mr. A. B. Knutson, of Clear Lake, Iowa raised 106.67 bushels an acre on five acres of corn. He used the planter we would like to show you. There are many advantages in using this planter but the most important one is its extreme accuracy. Let us show it to you the next time you are in town.

SCHOOL PUPILS ORGANIZE HEALTHY-AND WEALTHY CLUB AMONG SELVES

Savings Accounts One Of the Main Features

Elimination Of Coffee And Tea Drinking Among Objects Of Newly Formed Club

JUNIOR-SENIOR BANQUET

The Healthy and Wealthy Club deposited $43.89 last Wednesday afternoon. This club was organized about 8 weeks ago in Miss Bond's citizenship class. The group of seventh graders were talking about bad habits and it was decided that the two worst ones were saving money and drinking tea and coffee habitually. Over 50 per cent of the class of 44 members drank coffee, two or three times a day before the class organized the Club. Only very few in the class had bank accounts, and many had not been to the bank to deposit for over a year. The class decided to have a club which would try to break up those two bad habits. The matter of drinking coffee was checked up and we found that the people who did drink coffee so much, were the most nervous in the class, and in most cases, they were the ones underweight.

The Club believes that it is getting results. It has checked up each week on each individual. It has raised the percentage of those who do not drink from 50 to 98 percent and it expects to have it 100 per cent before very long and then keep it that way.

Last Wednesday those who had saved 50 cents or more went down to the banks and deposited their money. Several new accounts were opened, and many dead ones revived. Twenty-two members of the Club deposited $43.39. There were several who had their accounts in neighboring banks and there were others who are waiting until they get $1.00 to open an account so that they will receive their small bank. The group expects to deposit once more before school is out and then continue its good work all next year.

The Club wishes to thank all the parents for cooperating so nicely in this matter.

The second division of the Audubon Society had their first Field trip on Tuesday of last week. The girls gained much knowledge concerning bird lore, and are very enthusiastic over the prospects of this new and interesting study.

Doloras Olsen returned to her work in the Kindergarten this week after having been ill with whooping cough.

The School notes are unusually brief this week, especially due to lack of material from the various grades. We, as reporters, of the school notes, enter a special plea to the teachers, and their pupils to try to add something of interest each week to the school notes. This could probably be accomplished by jotting down a few notes of interest each day and thus handing us the sum total on Monday of every week. So next Monday watch this column for the increase in items from the elementary grades of the school.

Thursday afternoon, about 1:15, it was casually reported to the girls of the High School, that there was a huge bus parked in front of the school house, and it was rumored that the Drake Men's Glee Club made up the largest part of the passengers. You can imagine the scramble that ensued in the rush for windows that commanded a clear view of the scenery south of the school house. And, a few minutes later, much to our delight, the assembly bell rang and the High School trooped down to the auditorium for a charming forty minute program by the Drake Glee Club. The audience was much impressed with the wonderful chorus work given. Though the men were the recipients of a bitter reproof from the director, whether the real thing or a gag, they gave an excellent performance. In addition to the

THE COMMUNITY CLUB MEETS

The Community Club met in their monthly business meeting Friday afternoon. During the business session it was voted to keep the rest-room open every evening and Sundays; also in the early morning hours for the accomodation of tourists, beginning with the 1st of May.

After the business the program as published was carried out. Miss Ward favored us with an excellent piano number. Mrs. Curtis, in her afficient way gave us a plan of her dream garden of perennials, to help us in constructing ours. Mrs. Ira Christie very helpfully explained to us her method of caring for and feeding brooder chicks.

The hostesses, with Mrs. Chapman as chairman, served excellent coffee and doughnuts.

TWO MEXICAN 'LEGGERS PLEAD GUILTY AT CLARION

Monitor: Joe Pertezz and Elsisio Nunez appeared Monday morning before Judge Clock to answer to a charge of having liquor in their possession, and upon pleas of guilty being made each was fined $500 and sentenced to five months in jail, but the men were paroled to a representative of the beet sugar factory at Mason City. The men were arrested on Monday of last week by Belmond officers at their residence near the Belmond sugar factory. After preliminary hearing before Justice Fetrow at Belmond they were bound over to the district court, where they plead guilty. The liquor was found in secluded places in their homes. Nunez is single, but Pertezz has a wife and eight children.

(These two are the men mentioned in last week's Independent as having been arrested by Marshal Finn and Night Marshal Quandt.)

VARIETY STORE CHANGES HANDS

J. E. Pfaltzgraff Sells To St. Paul Company, Monday.

A change of business of interest to Belmond people was made Monday when the H. E. Engstrom Co., of St. Paul, Minn., purchased the Belmond Variety Store of J. E. Pfaltzgraff.

Possession of the business was given immediately and the new owners are now in charge. Mr. W. B. Roper, of St. Paul, is in charge of the store for the Engstrom Company, he and Mrs. Roper having secured rooms at the W. J. Morse home. Mr. Roper is an energetic, progressive young man who has had experience the past six years in conducting Variety stores in Iowa, Missouri and Florida. He announces that the stock of the store here is now being invoiced and that next week the store will have a special sale on seasonable merchandise. The interior is being rearranged and the goods made ready. New goods will arrive next week, it is expected, and the stock is to be enlarged.

No change will be made in the name, the firm being continued as the Belmond Variety Store.

Mr. Pfaltzgraff, who has been in business in Belmond for a number of years, states he has not completed any plans for the future, but will at least remain in Belmond for the present.

Luncheon club meets this week, Thursday in regular session. There are several matters of importance to be considered, among them being the report of the committee on revision of the by-laws of the club.

McELHINNEY CASE TO JURY FRIDAY

Both Sides Battle Desperately In Goldfield Banker's Trial

Attorneys were making their arguments before the jury in the McElhinney case when court adjourned, Tuesday evening. It was expected that pleas of the attorneys will continue thru most of Wednesday before the jury is finally sent to the jury room to decide whether or not the Goldfield banker is guilty of a charge of fradulent banking.

When court adjourned Friday afternoon for the Sunday recess, at the close of the prosecution, motion was made by the defendant's attorneys to direct a verdict of acquittal, but this was denied by Judge Clock.

Joe Vallie, a fugative from justice in Wright county on a charge of assault committed at Dows, is in the toils of the law in Story county charged with bootlegging and stealing hogs. He was living with his brother-in-law, near the town of Maxwell. Sheriff Johnson went to Nevada, Tuesday morning, to consult with Story County officers, and it was decided that Vallie will be held there and tried on the more serious charges which are lodged against him in Story county.

Last week Henry F. Sporaa of Forest City was brought to Clarion by a state agent, being charged with selling a motor vehicle without properly transferring the same. The matter was adjusted and Sheriff Johnson was about to release the defendant, when he received a telephone message from Sheriff Olson of Forest City, stating he wanted Sporaa on a larceny charge. It seems that a farmer in that locality was engaged in distributing several rolls of wire along the line of a proposed new fence. Sporaa came along in a Ford truck at the other end of the field and thinking the farmer's back was turned jumped out and loaded one of the bundles into his truck. The farmer looked up just in time to detect him. He at once went to the house and called up Sheriff Olson. That afternoon Sporaa and the wire were located at Garner. A few days later Sheriff Johnson chanced to be in Eagle Grove and ran across Sporaa, who was driving a Ford sedan without license plates. He decided something was wrong and placed him under arrest. About an hour later he received another message from Forest City saying Sporaa had taken French leave while having a preliminary trial before a justice of the peace, who allowed the defendant to go out in search of a bondsman. Sporaa was taken to the Winnebago county jail Saturday to wait trial.

Judge Clock will go to Mt. Pleasant next week to preside on a case where the supervisors of Henry county were ousted from office for alleged illegal irregularities in connection with their office. The members are contesting the proceedings. The Iowa supreme court conferred the honor upon Judge Clock of selecting him as the trial judge in this matter.

Will Hite, a temporary resident of Clarion was fined $100 and costs in Mayor Tompkin's court last week,

ESCAPE INJURY IN AUTO WRECK

J. S. White And Louis Moe In Auto Crash Here Sunday

J. S. White and son, Bobby, Mrs. Will White, and Louie Moe and Bruce Waddington escaped with minor bruises and cuts in an automobile collision, Sunday morning, on Primary No. 15, north of Belmond.

Mr. White, together with his son and mother, were in White's Willys-Knight sedan enroute to their cottage at Clear Lake. They were driving behind Mr. Moe and Mr. Waddington, in Moe's Ford sedan, the two latter gentlemen going up to the gravel pit on the Rock Island right-of-way about two miles north of Belmond. Moe, driving the Ford, slowed down to turn to the left going into the gravel pit. White, not knowing Moe was going to turn, started to pass the Ford. The two cars came together at the front ends, White's car being thrown completely over once and half way over the second time. Glass from the windshield was scattered all over the car, but very fortunately none of the occupants were injured seriously. Mrs. White received several painful cuts and bruises, the worst of which, a cut on the head, required four stitches to sew up. Mr. White received a sprained shoulder, and the boy only a few minor bumps. Moe and Waddington escaped almost unscathed.

White's car had had both front wheels, of the disc type, bent, the front axle bent and damage to fenders and body. Moe's car had a front wheel broken, axle sprung, and fenders and body damaged. The Ford service truck hauled Moe's car back to town, while Merrold Galloway drove White's car back under it's own power. An odd incident of the smash-up occured when a key, in the bottom of a valise in the White car, was driven thru the grippe, while a dozen eggs, also in the valise, had only a few eggs cracked. Both car owners carried liability insurance, it is said.

ROGGE-EVANS

Belmond friends of Dr. Cora M. Rogge were surprised last week to learn of her marriage to R. C. Evans, of Davenport. The wedding took place last Wednesday, April 27, at Mason City, Rev. Dibble, of the First Congregational church officiating.

Mr. and Mrs. Evans left Sunday for a short trip, and will return to Belmond the latter part of this week when Mrs. Evans will close up her Chiropractic office and the couple will then move to Davenport where they will make their home.

Dr. Rogge located in Belmond last November, establishing her office in rooms over the Belmond Furniture Co. building where she has practiced the past winter. She made many friends here who will unite in wishing Mr. and Mrs. Evans the best of life. Mr. Evans is an electrical engineer, connected with the General Electric Co. at Davenport. He became acquainted with his bride while she was attending the Chiropractic school at that place.

BELMOND CHAPTER OF RED CROSS IS ASKED TO DOUBLE QUOTA

OBITUARY

Arthur Eldon Jones, youngest son of John H. Jones and Maude Bowers Jones, was born in Belmond June 8th, 1919, and died May 1st, 1927, aged 7 years, 10 months and 22 days. There remain to mourn his loss his parents, three sisters, Verna Riggs and husband; Ester, Marie, and brother, Ralph and wife; several aunts, uncles and cousins, his school friends and playmates.

Just why Arthur's life should be of such few years we do not know, that remains the secret of the Almighty God, and Father of us all. His life had been that of any normal boy of his age. His pleasing disposition made him a friend of his acquaintances. His ambitions were those of an industrious boy.

Had Arthur finished this term of school he would have completed the second grade in our Public Schools. There is no death, the stars go down
To rise upon some other shore,
And bright in heaven's jeweled crown
They shine forevermore.
There is no death, although we grieve
When beautiful familiar forms
That we have learned to love are torn
From our embracing arms.
Although with bowed and breaking hearts
With sabled garb and silent tread
We bear their senseless dust to rest
And say that they are "dead."
They are not dead—they have but passed
By and the mists that blind us here
Into the new and larger life
Of that serener sphere.
And ever near us, though unseen,
The dear immortal spirits tread;
For all the boundless universe
Is life—there are no dead.

Funeral services were conducted by Rev. J. T. Snyder of the Methodist church at the home of Arthur's sister, Mrs. Ed Riggs, Monday, May 2nd, burial taking place in Franklin Grove cemetery.

Card of Thanks

We wish to express to our neighbors and friends our sincere thanks for their kindness and sympathy for us in the death of our son and brother.

POULTRY WORK IS DISCUSSED

Interesting Follow-Up Meeting Held In Pleasant Township

The Farm Bureau follow-up poultry meeting held at the Pleasant township center school Friday evening was very successful. This was the second lesson of the poultry project and was ably given by Mrs. J. M. Sampson, vice director. It was on sanitation, diseases and summer management. Those in attendance seemed to be greatly interested and thought it a profitable meeting.

The matter of range mash feeders was considered and a plan discussed of getting some lumber yard to make a number for as reasonable a cost as possible.

After the lesson, a social hour and lunch was enjoyed. Mrs. Menno Frohling had charge of that part of the program.

It is hoped that more of these meetings will be held and that they will be well atttended to show the leaders that their work is appreciated. ***

Increase In Flood Area Of The South Brings Another Call For Emergency Funds

LEAVE DONATION AT BANK

An appeal is being made to the public by the Red Cross chapter of Belmond for help in raising its second quota for the relief of the flood victims in the South. O. L. Varland, chairman of the Belmond chapter, received the following telegram Tuesday morning, from Wm. A. Baxter, Jr., chairman of the district at St. Louis:

"O. L. Varland, Belmond, Iowa.

"Upon recommendation Hoover following completion survey disaster area Red Cross Central Committee decided in view vast increase of flooded area that emergency situation now demands minimum Ten Million Dollars. This doubles quota already assigned your chapter. If you have already raised double your quota continue efforts secure large amount as possible. Extend appeal to all communities your chapter jurisdiction. Confident we can depend upon continuance your loyal and devoted efforts this crisis."

As this telegram states, the increase in the flood disaster has made necessary double the amount originally called for and therefore doubled the quota. The Belmond chapter filled their first quota by sending $100.00 from the funds on hand. This amount has been received and recognition given the chapter for it by the Central Committee. The additional quota, however, the local chapter is seeking to raise by public subscription, inasmuch as the chapter has been using a considerable sum in home work thru the Red Cross nurse and other ways.

Subscriptions to the increased quota may be made at either of the Belmond banks. As the need is urgent and immediate, Belmond people are asked to subscribe whatever they can at once, at either bank, so that the local chapter can send its quota as soon as possible. Scores of thousands of persons are homeless, many have lost their lives, and over a billion dollars' damage has been the toll to date in the floods in the South, the greatest disaster America has ever had in its history. And this loss of life and property is increasing daily, as levees break and hundreds of thousands of additional acres are flooded with the consequent addition of homeless families. Thousands of families have lost everything, including their homes and crops, and the need of immediate relief is not to be stressed too strongly. Belmond has never failed in its alloted quota for the Red Cross in any emergency, in wartime or in peace. Leave your dollar, or whatever you can give, at either bank, and Do It Now!

A bulletin received Monday states that the final extent of the devastation cannot yet be predicted. Thousands of additional refugees are added each day. One weeks rations sufficient for 14,000 people were sent Sunday by boat to Leland, Miss. Five day's rations for 14,000 people were sent to Choctow, Miss. To date the Red Cross has drawn 20,000 tents, 100,000 blankets, 35,000 cots and 60,000 bed sacks (for use in place of cots) from United States army supplies. Fifteen hundred gallons of drinking water were dispatched to Greenville, Miss., where normal supplies have been contaminated.

Every sportsman and lover of fishing, as well as those who appreciate the beauties of nature, should make it a point to take some action regarding Morse Lake this summer. In this little lake, Belmond has an unusually attractive beauty spot and an ideal location to which one may repose on warm summer days for picnic parties, bathing, or fishing. The lake has been stocked liberally with game fish in years past, and these fish were just reaching the stage where fishing would be worth while. Being small, and not overly deep, the lake freezes over, and last winter literally thousands of bull heads and hundreds of game fish were killed by freezing and smothering. One man who knows what happened, estimated that five thousand bull heads and over five hundred pike were smothered when the lake froze over this winter. R. D. Box, who has a farm on the lakeside, endeavored to keep the fish from smothering by cutting holes in the ice, and did cut many, but as he says, one hole would freeze over before the next one could be cut. Last summer a petition was sent to the Iowa Conservation Bureau asking for help in installing a windmill and pump to keep the water level up and the lake open in winter. The petition was acknowledged, and pigeonholed. Nothing was done about it. Mr. Box has offered to give a lease on any land necessary to use in installing such a mill and pump; Mr. Griesy has offered to furnish the mill and equipment at cost; Mr. Olson offers to drill the well at a good substantial discount; plenty of labor is available in helping install the mill and pump by donation. With all this available, why not do something before another winter arrives?

Belmond seems just about as near a tourist park as it did a year ago, which is nowhere. Everybody talks about it, practically all agree the town needs one, but nothing is accomplished. Why, we don't know. One thing we do know, it is a disgrace to Belmond that we haven't one. Probably, from the appearance of things, it will continue to be a disgrace unless the town can get behind some concerted attempt and force the park thru. Meanwhile, let's take down the tourist park and welcome signs; it's obtaining money under false pretenses.

THE CORN STALK AGITATION

Wallace's Farmer: So much is being said nowadays about the making of paper, wall board, and artificial silk from corn stalks that farmers are beginning to wonder if there is anything to it. For forty years farmers have been told about the wonderful products which can be made out of corn, but in spite of all the talk, it seems that very little more corn is being used industrially today than was the case a generation ago.

The present corn stalk agitation in Iowa traces quite largely to Prof. O. R. Sweeney, at Ames. Professor Sweeney is an enthusiast who undoubtedly has made considerable quantities of paper, wall board, etc. from corn stalks.

As to whether corn stalks can be gathered and sold by the farmers cheaply enough to produce paper in competition with paper made from wood pulp, no one knows. We do know that corn stalks have a value per acre as feed of at least one dollar, and that the fertilizer value of an acre of corn stalks is at least three dollars. As to what it will cost to cut and bale the corn stalks and haul them five or six miles to a factory, no one can estimate very accurately as yet. After taking into account the fertility value of the corn stalks, the feeding value, and the probable expenses of baling and hauling, it is doubtful if many farmers will care to sell their corn stalks for less than ten dollars a ton.

The European borer is a complicating factor in the case. Apparently it makes corn stalk destruction in infested territory an urgent matter. It is easily possible, therefore, that fighting the European corn borer will not only greatly increase the use of of the silo but will also result in making great quantities of paper and wall board out of corn stalks. As to what will commercially prove to be most practical depends largely on the economy of the different types of machinery which will eventually be worked out.

At the present time we believe that the chances are ten to one that paper made out of corn stalks will be unable to compete commercially with paper made out of wood pulp. We believe the same can be said with regard to wall board made out of corn stalks as compared with wall board made out of the waste from the sugar cane mills. Fifteen or twenty years hence, however, the tide may turn and corn stalks may come into their own, partly as a result of the corn borer, partly because of the disappearance of the forests, and partly because of the growing demand for wall board.

An unfortunate thing about the corn stalk agitation so far has been that it has come to a considerable extent from folks who are unfriendly to the farm point of view The people who talk the industrial use of corn stalks usually give the impression that they are about as much interested in knocking the McNary Haugen idea as they are in boosting corn stocks For instance, a writer for a big Philadelphia publishing house told a group of Des Moines business men: "What you people need to do out here is to get behind Sweeney and boost his corn stalk work and forget about this impractical farm legislation." Perhaps half the talk about corn stalks is put forward merely to befog the farm issue.

The day may come when corn stalk factories will be thicker than creameries in Iowa. In that day Iowa, even after taking into account the loss in soil fertility, may profit to the extent of a hundred million dollars a year more than she is today from her corn stalks. In any event, there will first be a very trying development period. Our older readers will remember the frauds perpetrated by creamery organizers forty years ago. There is danger that high pressure organizers may try to start corn stalk factories in localities where success will be impossible.

The day may come when corn farmers will look back to Professor Sweeney in the same way that dairy farmers now look on Professor Babcock, of Wisconsin. During the next fifteen years, however, we do not believe that the manufacturing of corn stalks will increase the income of Iowa farmers by as much as one-tenth of one percent. It will be worth while, however, for Iowa farmers to watch year after year with some interest the slow development both of the European corn borer and corn stalk manufacture. They both have eventual significance, altho they mean but little today.

ADVERTISING STOPS THIS

The advertising manager of a large mail order house expressed himself as follows: "We have a bureau whose duty it is to read each week the country newspapers from all over the country. There is not a paper of any consequence in our trade territory that our bureau doesn't get. The bureau looks over these newspapers, and when we find a town where the merchants are not advertising in the local paper we immediately flood that territory with our literature. It always brings results far in excess of the same effort put forth in territory where the local merchants use their local papers."—Kodak Salesman.

YES, WE HAVE NONE

Here's the way the editor of the Anthon Herald feels about it: "The Methodist Ladies' Aid Society of Anthon had heard of the big heart of Henry Field, the voice of Shenandoah, so decided to ask him for a donation for their bazaar. Henry answered politely that in the past he had given bulbs and seeds to bazaars but the requests had become so numerous that he would have to "forego this pressure in the future, so are unable to do anything at this time." It is the same old story that we heard at mother's knee. If a home organization seeks aid it must come from home persons with the local business men doing the lion's share of it. You may buy your seeds to the response of a siren voice through a 'mike' but remember your home seed man, your merchant and mine, is the boy who digs down to support all home enterprises and if he is good enough to do that he is entitled to seed business or business of any nature."

Reinbeck Courier: Belmond is without a city government. Four of the five councilmen there resigned, leaving the council without a quorum. It is therefore questionable whether the lone councilman and the mayor can legally do anything, even to calling a special election to elect more councilmen. In the case of vacancy on the council, the remaining councilmen appoint members. But whether one man can appoint four fellow councilmen is not decided and in the interval of deciding that matter little or nothing is being done. It will be interesting to see whether Belmond does not get along about as well with no government as with it.

BEAUTY HINTS

If you would keep a smooth brow and avoid wrinkles, do not worry. Easier said than done, of course, but possible most of the time. Worry is a habit many women allow themselves to fall into. They are overanxious and not trustful enough. This is a pretty good old world, and as we go along through it, we find most things better arranged than we could fix them, if we had the planning ourselves.

There is a Providence which watches over us, prepares the way for us, and shapes events. Mother Nature is a kind old dame and takes care of many things which bid fair to go wrong, as she heals the bruised tree and makes grass cover the battlefield. Most people have more sense than we accredit to them, and our husbands and children are as likely to come out all right as to choose the path of destruction.

Time, itself, is our friend and adjusts many perplexing matters, ironing them all out with the progress of the days. Then, when all is said and done, one may leave something to chance. Things which look rather bad are likely to take a turn, and one can never tell what good luck is just around the corner.

If worry accomplished anything, changed situations, worked cures, it might pay them to worry—but if it just gets you another wrinkle, what's the use?

PSYCHOLOGY OF COLOR

Color indicates and produces certain emotions. A pleasing color in a garment may even inspire one with happy and harmonious thoughts, much as music does. An unharmonious color may make one very unhappy and disturbed. In general the effect of colors is as follows:

Green—denotes freshness, youth, hope, new life.

Blue—Dark blue is depressing, but may be livened by touches of bright colors. Melancholy and despondency may accompany dark blue or black. Light blue and bright blues indicate purity, fidelity, clear skies, open spaces.

Yellows and orange—indicate vivacity, gayety, hilarity.

Pinks—said to be sentimental.

Lavendars and violets—express mystery and sweetness and serenity.

Browns and taupes—sombre and quiet, unless strongly tinged with orange and red, by which they become enlivened and express richness and effulgence.

Greys—are cool and quiet, suggest calmness and dignity.

Purples—represent luxury and royalty.

Light color tones express youth, femininity and gaiety. Dark tones express strength, dignity, repose.

DYE INSTEAD OF BUY

Home economics demonstrators in some places are teaching women to dye scarfs, handkerchiefs, pillow covers, drapes, curtains, and dresses, using as their slogan: "Dye instead of Buy." It may not suit the merchants, but we predict that it will be music in Dad's ears.

THE WORLD'S GREAT EVENTS

ALBERT PAYSON TERHUNE

(© by Dodd, Mead & Company.)

Von Moltke

"SIRE," said Napoleon III's minister of war, "all is in absolute readiness for the Prussian campaign, down to the last button on the last gaiter of the last soldier."

Napoleon III was well aware that Europe distrusted him. He knew the French were naturally restless, that they had had a long era of military glory, and that a few years of humdrum peace might lead them to weary of him. So he went on the principle that a war every four years would keep them content, swell France's martial renown and make safe his own crown.

In the first decade of the Nineteenth century Napoleon the Great had crushed Prussia to the dust and humiliated her king. The son of that king was on the Prussian throne in 1870 and the great Napoleon's nephew ruled France.

Bismarck, Von Moltke and other Prussian statesmen had foreseen trouble with France and were well prepared for it, even if they did not (as many think) secretly bring about the conflict. France, on the other hand, was totally unready for any such clash. Prussia's revenge for the sixty-year-old injuries was at hand. The overt occasion of the Franco-Prussian war was as follows:

Queen Isabella of Spain was deposed. The Spanish crown was offered to Prince Leopold of Hohenzollern, a relative to King William of Prussia. Napoleon III at once declared that such selection would destroy the "balance of power" and leave France exposed to Prussian attack on east and south. He therefore demanded that Leopold's candidature be withdrawn. King William meekly obeyed. Utterly deceived by such submission, Napoleon went a step further and demanded a pledge from William that no Prussian prince should ever sit on the Spanish throne. William promptly refused to grant so absurd a request and publicly snubbed the ambassador who transmitted it. This was such an excuse as Napoleon had longed for. France at once declared war on Prussia (July 19, 1870) and rushed a body of troops to the German frontier.

So far, so good. But, owing to graft and incompetency, France's army was in wretched condition. Yet France went mad with patriotic zeal. The feats of the first Napoleon against Prussia were recalled. Everyone expected a triumphal march to the Prussian capital. The cry "On to Berlin!" was on all lips.

In contrast to this, Prussia's troops were in splendid preparation. The north and south German states (on many of which Napoleon III had been told he might rely for neutrality or even aid) unanimously joined Prussia, sinking internecine grievances in a common cause; 477,000 men were mustered, as against France's 310,000. The German forces were divided into three armies, which at a signal crept unchecked across the Rhine like a huge three-headed snake, preceded by a cloud of Uhlans, sweeping all before them and striking at France's very heart. King William was commander in chief, with Marshal von Moltke, the peerless tactician, as his chief of staff. The French armies, commanded by Napoleon III in person, made Metz their headquarters.

On August 2, part of Napoleon's northern army drove a handful of Prussians out of the town of Saarbruck. But thereafter Prussia acted ever on the offensive. The French, individually, fought like heroes, but they were no match for their stronger foes. In two armies France's incompetently commanded, ill-equipped forces were hurled back and prevented from uniting. One of these armies was led by Bazaine, former conqueror of Mexico; the other by MacMahon, afterwards president of France. Bazaine was successively beaten at Courcelles, Mars-la-Tour and Gravelotte (August 14, 16 and 18) and was penned up in the city of Metz. MacMahon moved forward to aid him, but on September 1, was surrounded at Sedan, and next day was forced to surrender with forty generals, 4,000 lesser officers and 84,000 men.

Napoleon III, who was with MacMahon's army, was also captured and packed off a prisoner to a German fortress. At news of his capture and the disgraceful failure of French arms rage and mortification seized all France. Napoleon was deposed; his wife and son were compelled to flee secretly to England; and, September 4, a republic was proclaimed.

On September 19, the Germans besieged Paris. On September 28 Bazaine surrendered at Metz. The latter city, snatched from Germany in the days of Charles V, once more was held by its original masters. Paris fell after a long and gallant siege; armies sent to relieve it were beaten. France was at Prussia's mercy. On March 1, 1871, the victorious Germans entered Paris; passing through the mighty Arc de Triomphe, which had been erected to commemorate the martial triumphs of France; thus adding a climax to perhaps the grimmest irony in the annals of warfare.

The provinces of Alsace and Lorraine and an indemnity of $1,000,000,000 were exacted by the conquerors—a fairly cheap fee for curing France of Napoleonism!

Slight Trouble

It was 3:00 o'clock in the morning and the lobby was deserted. The buzzer buzzed insistently and at last the sleepy elevator boy took his car up to the fourth floor, returning shortly with a guest in a bathrobe.

"Say," said the guest, rather thickly, "wantcha change my room. Room 412. Wantcha change it."

The night clerk said it was impossible, but the man insisted and finally was assigned to room 312. As the guest left the desk, leaning on the elevator boy, the clerk asked him what was wrong with 412.

"Nothing—nothing at all. It's a fine room. Only if you go up there now you'll find it's on fire."

AGRICULTURAL NEWS NOTES

NEW EGG LAW PROTECTS CONSUMERS

"The new egg law which passed the 42nd General Assembly, and which will go into effect on July 1st, will be a vital help to both consumers and producers," states M. G. Thornburg, Secretary of Agriculture. "If consumers insist on buying eggs labeled as fresh, the department of Agriculture can then protect the quality of eggs which they purchase."

"The new law establishes standards. Any dealer who sells eggs labeled as fresh, must have eggs that are not to exceed fourteen days old, clean an sound, with an air cell of two-eighths of an inch or less in depth, yolk only slightly visible, white firm and clear, and the germ not visible."

"Consumers should note that this law will not only apply to eggs that are labeled as fresh," states Mr. Thornburg. "Therefore it will be up to the consumers to insist on the eggs being properly labeled. The new law will also encourage buying eggs on grade from producers as the standard for fresh eggs is practically the same as Grade 1 eggs under the standards which were adopted as buying grades."

EGGS MUST BE CANDLED AFTER MAY 1ST

"All buyers of eggs must candle them after May 1st," states R. G. Clark, Chief of the Dairy and Food Division of the Iowa Department of Agriculture.

"Dealers have had an open season during March and April when eggs did not need to be candled, as practically all eggs which are received during those months are fresh and good. As the weather gets warmer more eggs will show spoilage and it is therefore necessary that we require dealers to candle all eggs purchased."

"Egg candling has been beneficial to producers of good eggs," states Mr. Clark. "Our figures show that the candling of eggs has increased the average price at least two cents per dozen. Eliminating spoiled eggs from market channels has been the reason for this increase in price."

FARM BUREAU MAKING LAND TAX SURVEY

A state-wide Farm Rental survey to examine still further into the question of whether or not Iowa farmers are paying excessive land taxes, is being conducted throughout the state this month under the sponsorship of state headquarters of the Iowa Farm Bureau Federation, in cooperation with the State Department of Agriculture and the Iowa Weather and Crop Service.

Approximately 16,000 of the 95,000 rented farms in Iowa will participate in the survey. Results from this investigation will be tabulated and analzed at state headquarters of the Farm Bureau and will then be used for purposes of comparison with the present taxes being levied against farm lands throughout the state.

"Economists generally agree that rent is the best measure of land value," President Chas. E. Hearst of the Farm Bureau said. "In the present survey, the lands in each county will also be valued by two unprejudiced appraisures and by the user of the land itself, as well as by the capitalization of the net income from rent."

"Farmers of Iowa, who constitute less than half of the state's population, are paying more than two-thirds of the property tax. They are also paying considerably more than any other class of people in proportion to their net income. The object of the present inquiry is to see if some way can be developed which will give the farmers a fairer deal in the final division of the tax burden."

As soon as the farm rental survey has been completed, the Farm Bureau expects to seek similar data regarding farms which operated by their owners and also farms which are being sold, both at private and public sales.

The data on the present survey which is largely now in the hands of the County Farm Bureaus is expected at state headquarters by May 20.

PLANT SOYBEANS IN CORN HILLS

Corn planting time should also be soybean planting time, says H. D. Hughes, head of the Farm Crops Department, Iowa State College, Ames. While generally soybeans will yield more seed if planted from one to two weeks later than corn, the bean yield will be quite satisfactory if planted at the same time, he says.

Because the beans can be planted at the same time as corn and because they grow well on distinctly acid soils, where other legumes will not grow, they make a very satisfactory suplement to be planted in corn for hogging down.

The average farmer would give his hogs no protein supplement in hogging-down corn if he were not providing it in the form of soybeans in the corn, which makes the crop even more desirable. The amount of soybeans grown on an acre with corn is not sufficient to furnish all the protein supplement that is required for best results, however, and the soybeans should be further supplemented with such feeds as tankage, the Iowa Station feeding experiments have shown.

For hogging-down, Professor Hughes recommends the Manchu variety, planting three or four beans per hill with a special planter attachment. In a series of tests run at the Iowa Experiment Station, in which Manchu beans were planted at the rate of three and four beans per hill, corn yielded 49.66 bushels per acre as against a yield of 54.55 bushels per acre where no beans were planted.

In these tests the beans gave a yield of 197 pounds per acre, but reduced the yield of shelled corn 273.8 pounds per acre. Corn was figured at 66 cents per bushel (at the time of experiment), while soybeans were valued at $1.60 per bushel for feeding purposes on the basis of $70 tankage.

On the foregoing basis, the bean yield had a value of $5.01 to offset a decrease in the value of the corn crop of $2.93. These figures do not include the cost of hauling the tankage or other supplement, in case it were to be used instead of the beans, nor they do not make any allowance for the value of the leguminous bean crop to the soil.

GET CANNING INFORMATION NOW

With the canning season approaching rapidly, the housewife might well study the problems which confronted her during last year's task of preserving the winter supply of food, suggests Miss Harriet C. Brigham, home economics instructor, Iowa State College, Ames. Such problems can be cleared up now, before the actual job of canning starts.

Much information may be obtained from canning bulletins published by the United States Department of Agriculture and by various states. One bulletin that is particularly recommended by Miss Brigham is Farmer's Bulletin No. 1265, altho she suggests that when writing to the United States Department of Agriculture, that the request be made for all recent bulletins on the problems of canning.

Miss Brigham also suggests that housewives secure Food Series Bulletin No. 139 from the New York State College of Home Economics, Ithaca, N. Y., which is on the subject of "Food Preservation."

IOWA HENS HIT FAST EGG PACE

Not for many months have Iowa hens filled the egg baskets so bountifully as during last March. They laid nearly twice as many eggs on the average as during the preceding month and over five times as many as they did last November, when they touched the low producing point of the year.

The report of the Iowa record flocks for March, just issued at Iowa State College, discloses that the 82,421 laying hens in the 358 flocks on which records were kept, laid an average of 1g.9 eggs each, which is over an egg per hen more than the record flocks averaged in the same month last year.

Leading the 358 flocks of the state for March in average egg yield per hen was the Barred Rock flock of 64 layers, owned by Mrs. John J. Arkfeld of Panama, Shelby county. Mrs. Arkfeld's hens averaged 26 eggs each, or almost an egg per day for her entire flock.

The second best laying record was made by the 203 S. C. Rhode Island Reds owned by Mrs. W. M. Ferrin of Winthrop, Buchanan county. Mrs. Ferrin's hens averaged 25.8 eggs each. The third best mark was 23.5 eggs per hen, a record made by the 300 White Leghorns owned by Floyd Schlopie of Benton, Ringgold county.

Jesse D. Sickler of Ogden, and Mrs. Louis J. Shores of Waucoma were tied for fourth place in the state, with flock averagos of 23.4 eggs per hen. Mr. Sickler's flock consists of 169 White Leghorns, while 289 S. C. Buft Leghorns comprise the Shores flock.

Many large gross flock returns were reported for the month, two exceeding $1,000, two just under a thousand and more than a dozen others with receipts of more than $300.

Mrs. C. D. Martin of New Providence, Hardin county, reported gross returns of $1,509.89 from her S. C. Buff Leghorns. This figure was for total receipts from all sources. Her laying flock consisted of 721 birds in March, the feed bill for which was $97.50.

The state's second best returns were $1,344.58, the amount obtained by B. E. Craven, Kellogg, Jasper county, from his White Leghorns. Mr. Craven had 686 layers last month, which laid more than 15,000 eggs and required $97.75 worth of feed.

The third highest total returns from one flock were reported by Cleve Erhardt of Elgin, Fayette county. Mr. Erhardt received $976.11. His flock of layers, White Leghorn breed, consisted of 781 birds.

The fourth best mark in the state in gross returns was made by Guy Brady of Sac City. Mr. Brady owns White Leghorns and his gross receipts for the month were $889.81.

CORN BORER HAS MANY COUSINS

Because various caterpillars are frequently mistaken for the European corn borer and because two of these in particular cannot be told from the borer except by an expert with a microscope, Dr. C. J. Drake, state entomologist, and G. C. Decker, Iowa State College, Ames, have prepared careful descriptions and drawings of these pests which are now available in a new circular, No. 103, which may be obtained by writing to the Bulletin Section, Iowa State College, Ames.

The caterpillars, which are often mistaken for the corn borer, differ from the real borer in one or more of the following features: body size, conformation, color or shape, or feeding habits. Some of the more common of these mistaken caterpillars are the smartweed borer, lotus borer, common stalk borer, burdock borer, lined corn stalk borer, corn ear worm, cutworms, armyworms, webworms of various kinds and many others.

Dr. Drake says that by careful consideration of the largae descriptions, the time of appearance and the character of injury, the European corn borer may be distinguished from most of the caterpillars discussed in Circular 103. The smartweed borer and the lotus borer are the exceptions, Dr. Drake says, because they so closely resemble the European corn borer that it takes an expert and a microscope to distinguish the difference with any certainty.

DRY COWS KEEP AVERAGE LOW

Too many dry cows and inferior feeds have sent average yields of butterfat downward in many heras during recent months. A comparison of the five leading cow testing associations in the state with the five having the lowest averages in one month, reveals that of the 1,740 cows in the five high organizations, only 228 were dry; of the 1,921 cows in the five low associations, 627, or about a third, were dry.

Still another fact shown in this comparison is that 77 of the 125 farmers in the high five associations had alfalfa, while only 40 of the 125 in the low associations had this feed. Likewise, 97 of the men in the high associations had silos, as compared with only 72 in the low associations.

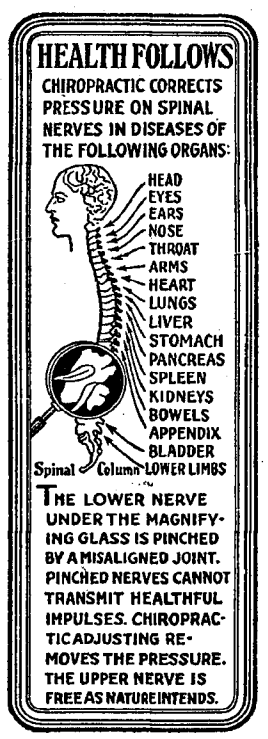
The cows in the five high associations averaged from 28.6 to 29.4 pounds of butterfat each per month; those in the five low associations had averages ranging between 13.3 and 16 pounds each, or only about a half of those in the five high associations. Thirty-six cws in the low associations had to be culled, while only 18 cows in the five high associations were sufficiently low in profits to be sold to the butcher.

"The comparison of these five high and five low associations shows clearly the advantage of belonging to a cow testing association," comments Jerry N. Spencer, dairy extension specialist of Iowa State College. "All but one of the five high associations have been operating several years, while only one in the five low group has been running more than a year. Men who join and stay in cow test associations not only get rid of their poor prducers, but they learn better methods of feeding and herd management."

"I . . . Lost My Mind!"

Because the taking of one's own life is a spectacular act it demands publicity. Thus we often read in such cases—"had been very despondent because of ill-health" as the explanation of an act so horrible and unnatural.

More frequently still does the same cause lead to the living death of insanity, though we hear of it less often, if at all. Dis-ease if left to work its way unchecked, can lead but to destruction.



It is not sufficient merely to alleviate pain or to suppress a symptom. The cause must be removed. The most frequent cause of disease is spinal interference with nerve transmission and this cause is reached only by Chiropractic Spinal Adjustments.

IN HIS RIGHT MIND AGAIN

"I was almost down and out for two years with nervous trouble and constipation. I had to take medicine all the time to keep myself going. Then I gave completely down and lost my mind. The best doctor in town treated me, but could give no relief. I was sent to a sanitarium for a month but still received no relief. My wife brought me back home, to die—I expect—but it happened that a chiropractor had located here, and it was insisted that I try him. I would not consent, having no faith, but my wife took me, against my will. When I had finished taking 30 adjustments, I was much improved. I began sleeping and now I am well, eat well and have my right mind. I am in better health than for 30 years. I am now 64 years old."—J. C. Foster, Chiropractic Rearch Bureau, Statement, No. 2111-M.

"Every Splinter Has A Point"

Vol. 2 — Thursday, May 5, 1927 — No. 3

Published in the Interests of the People of Belmond and Vicinity by the GREENLANDER LUMBER COMPANY.

We asked a man yesterday why he walked so lame. "Been makin' garden," he explained.

Do you realize that this year is one-third gone?

You can't make good Fence with poor posts. That's certain. But you can make a mighty good fence with our Cedar Posts. We have both round and split posts—and creosoted, if you desire.

Who can remember when the watering trough here in Belmond was the filling station, and people dreaded to start out on the road with a horse and buggy for fear they'd meet an auto?

Do you know that May 1st is a national holiday in Czecho - Slovakia? It doesn't make a bit of difference to us, but we thought we'd put it in here to fill space.

We've just heard of a man in this vicinity who taught his wife to drive the family car without resorting to profanity. Don't believe a word of it!

As summer comes we now surmise,
It'll soon be time to swat the flies.

We had three callers yesterday who stopped a while to visit with each other. They are all men well past middle age. And what do you suppose they talked about? You are right! About their grandchildren.

Nobody likes the pessimist and fault-finder. On the other hand, nobody likes the "Sunny Jim" individual who tries to make you think the sun shines 24 hours a day. However, we think there is every reason to be optimistic here in Belmond. There are good crop prospects and building is on the increase. We're looking for a year of genuine prosperity.

Check your corn losses!

Next season you can avoid these losses and increase your corn profits by treating your seed corn before planting.

The new Bayer treatment protects the seed from disease organisms on the seed and in the soil. It allows the seed to germinate and grow unmolested. Seed that is not treated is forced to fight the rots and molds which cause poor germination, "down" corn, root and stalk rots. And you lose bushels that should be dollars in your pocket.

Makes Poor Seed Good

This treatment insures germination and sturdy growth never before possible from poor seed. Even selected seed is benefited by the treatment because of the protection it is given against the injurious and costly attacks of soil-infesting diseases.

Tested by U. S. Dept. of Agric.

Extensive tests by the U. S. Department of Agriculture show that the BAYER DUST treatment of nearly disease-free Dent corn gave an increase of 8.5 bushels per acre; of Diplodia infected seed, 15.8 bushels; and of Gibberella infected seed, 28.9 bushels. Phytopathology, January, 1926.

Costs but a Few Cents per Acre

You need no special equipment for this new seed treatment. No tiresome or lengthy procedure is involved. Two bushels of seed can be treated in less than three minutes. And the cost is less than 5c per acre.

Bayer seed treatment comes in two forms: BAYER DUST for Dust treatment and USPULUN for Soak treatment. Most growers prefer the Dust treatment because it is quicker and saves the trouble of drying the seed. Both are equally effective.

Increases Your Profits

BAYER DUST or USPULUN pay their small cost many times over because they:

Permit earlier planting.
Prevent soil decay.
Increase germination.
Prevent seedling blight, root and stalk rot.
Reduce the amount of "down" corn.
Increase the yield.
And bring greater profits.

TRY THIS HOME TEST ON YOUR SEED CORN

Prove the value of this treatment to your own satisfaction before the planting season. Today, get a 50c tin of BAYER DUST or USPULUN from your dealer. Select 50 kernels of corn at random from your seed corn. Treat 25 seeds and plant them in a cigar box or flower pot. Plant 25 untreated seeds in a similar container. Then watch them grow. The results will amaze you.

One pound of either treats six bushels of seed corn

Bayer Dust: 4 oz. 50c; 1 lb. $1.75; 5 lbs. $8.00. Uspulun: 2 oz. 50c; 1 lb. $2.75; 5 lbs. $13.00

If your dealer's stock of BAYER DUST and USPULUN has not yet arrived, send us his name and address.

chorus numbers there were several numbers by a talented quartet, and two or three solos by a Scotchman. He sang in both the Scotch and Swedish dialect and his humorous reading "A Swedish Sermon" was hugely appreciated, judging from the uproar. In spite of the fact that it was rather a long faced audience that faced the Glee Club, we all soon forgot our sorrow in missing our fifth period class, and enjoyed fully the Drake concert. "Do we all owe the Glee Club a vote of thanks, O members of the High School?" "Aye." The ayes have it, unanimously.

Last Thursday and Friday P. M. the boys' interclass track tournament was held. There was real competition throughout all the events, but the Seniors won by a large majority of points. Following are the lists of the winners in the various events.

Low Hurdles—Clifford Johnson 1st, Duane Jenison 2nd, John Baker 3rd.

The final score was:
Seniors, 65
Juniors, 13
Sophomores, 28
Freshmen, 18

Clifford Johnson and Bernard Davenport tied for individual point honors. Mr. Hall reports that prospects for the Saturday track meet are rather gloomy, considering that only 14 names have been sent in on the eligibility list; however the entry list has been withheld in order to keep up interest at practice. Our track team is strongest in the following events: Half mile, short dashes, and mile relay. There is a possibility of good work in the high jump and high hurdles also.

Literary Division I will present a program Friday afternoon. The chief feature of the program will be a Minstrel Show, which is a new and untried venture for this school, and ought to prove interesting. There will be the usual exchange of wisecracks under the capable supervision of an Interlocutor. It is intimated that there will be several takeoffs on some of the students that "live in the limelight" and it is also whispered some of the Faculty may leave the auditorium, wiser than when they entered it. There will be some "coon" banjo tricks pulled and I've heard that we may even get to hear some of the darkies croon their lullabies or sing their Blues. Don't let this brief summary of the treat in store for you, drive the timid ones away. Remember every thing meant for the best and is meant to be taken that way. Visitors are always welcome.

One of the outstanding events of the year was the Junior-Senior Banquet held at the Case Hotel, Saturday evening, April 30.

The room was prettily decorated in orange and blue to represent Holland. In one corner was a dutch windmill in full operation. In the opposite corner was a charmingly dressed Dutch girl and rows and rows of tulips. The menus were hand-painted windmills, place cards were blue wooden shoes, and yellow tulips made the nut cups.

A delicious four course dinner was served by some Sophomores dressed as Dutch girls and boys. Ninety-four were seated at the tables.

Between courses and after the dinner, the following toast program was given:

Address of Welcome ---------- Toastmaster Clair Hill
Holland ---------- Alvin Hauge
Music by a Quartet—Mrs. Fitts, Miss Waugh, Messrs. Varland and Williams
Windmills ---------- Margaret Leavy
Dykes ---------- Bertha Eliason
Wooden Shoes -- Dr. H. L. Gowdy
Tulips ---------- Miss Hammers
Presentation of the Ladder ---------- Alvin Hauge

The Seniors realize the amount of work the Juniors put on this wonderful banquet and it is hard to express our appreciation. We only wish we could look forward to another the coming year.

RED CROSS HEALTH NOTES

"Poor Tommy! The more he eats the thinner he gets. That boy eats enough for two people—and look at him!" Thus spoke Mrs. Brown to her neighbor one summer morning.

The neighbor looked at Tommy who was playing on the lawn. Pale, thin, hollow-cheeked, the picture of poor health, and with hardly enough energy and vitality to toss his rubber ball, he was indeed a pathetic figure. Then she said to Mrs. Brown:

"Eats much, but—eats WHAT?"

How many mothers make this unscientific comparison between the amount of food a child eats, and his physical condition! Malnutrition, one of childhood's most insidious enemies, is nt so much the result of not eating enough as it is of not eating the foods essential for healthy growth and development.

There was a time when food was simply food. We either liked it or didn't like it, and that was all there was to it. But now medical science has proved that the various foods have definite body functions to perform, just as with automobiles the gasoline gives it power, and the oil makes it run smoothly and efficiently. If only gasoline and no oil were used in the automobile, it would not be long before the mechanism would not function. The body responds just as definitely to neglect. If a child is to be healthy, the diet must include every food the body needs.

Authorities tell us that from 15 to 25 percent of American school children are malnourished. They also tell us that there is very little relation between poverty and malnutrition. Malnourished boys and girls are found almost as often in the homes of the wealthy as in the homes of the poor.

This malnutritin is largely a preventable defect in the childhood of the nation, and one which does not bode well for our future citizens.

Many physical defects which prevent children from growing and developing—both physically and mentally—are traceable directly to it.

Defective vision, bad teeth, rickets, generally poor health, and an unusual susceptibility to disease are only a few of the things in which malnutrition plays its ominous part. And no amount of corrective work will bring about permanent results until the child's diet is changed to conform to the edicts of modern knowledge about nutrition. Mothers, with the hundreds of demands upon their time and energy, can not all be expert malnutritionists, but every mother, with a little study can master the principles of sound nutrition in a comparatively short time. There is nothing mysterious about it. It is simplicity itself, and yet with all its simplicity, it is one of the most important subjects in the world to every mother, if she is to realize her hopes and ambitions, and is to give her children the very best which modern science affords.

How can a mother tell whether the child is malnourished? Final judgment should be left to a competent physician, but certain symptoms, easy to detect, are enough to convince a mother that a doctor's advice is needed. Among the most common are: improper proportion between weight and height; slouchy posture; a general lack of energy; little physical endurance; frequent colds, and early indications of rickets, such as bow-legs, decaying teeth, or knock-knees. It is, of course, impossible to make any hard and fast rule and to say that these things always denote malnutrition. However, the physician can readily determine their true cause and suggest remedial measures.

How much we, as guardians of our future citizenry, shall profit by this advice will be measured by our willingness to face the facts, to profit by the experience of others and use this all-important knowledge which has been gained by years of hard work. Nutrition, one of the newest of the fields of knowledge open to parents offers unbounded opportunities. By using it, our children can avoid many of the pitfalls of poor health, and parents can set them safely on the road to health and happiness. These two go hand in hand and one cannot long be kept without the other.

We need only to use the facilities at hand and to be sure that we place no lasting penalty on the child for our neglect and indifference.

BILL SAYS:

"Friend of mine said he wondered why the Electric Company kept selling Stock and when they would stop. That's easy to answer. The only reason the Company sells this Stock is to get the money necessary for the improvements and additions to the Power Plants and lines that you and I and other customers need at our own homes and in our business, and just as soon as these have all been provided then the Company will stop selling Stock, so the time for you and I to get in on the 7 percent Investment is NOW while we can."

Frank took Bill's tip. He was no rummy, he knew that a safe investment paying 7 percent is mighty good these days.

THE STORY

CHAPTER I.—With a stranger, whom he introduces as his nephew, Ned Carter, Claude Melnotte Dabbs returns from New York to his general grocery at Peace Valley, Pa. To "Aunt Lyddy," his housekeeper, he explains that Carter is a chance acquaintance, veteran of the World war, whom he had met and taken a liking to.

CHAPTER II.—Carter tells Aunt Lyddy he has broken with his family and his sweetheart because of his resentment of their ultra pacific tendencies. With Dabbs Ned visits Clover Hollow, abiding place of a "collection of good-natured cranks," according to the grocer. They almost run over a dog belonging to a girl whom Carter apparently recognizes. Ned delivers a grocery order, and in his absence the girl, Dorothy Selden, reveals that she knows him to be Ned Carter Rangeley, son of Loren Rangeley, New York banker.

CHAPTER III.—Next day Ned commences work as a "grocer's boy." At a residence, the "White House," he delivers an order marked "Johnston." There he meets a girl who tells him she and her mother are alone in the house, the servants having left them because of the "loneliness." He promises to try to procure household help. Meeting Dorothy Selden, his erstwhile sweetheart, he baffles her attempts to discover the reason for his presence in Peace Valley. Arrangement is made for a cook to go to the Johnstons'.

CHAPTER IV.—The cook being unable to begin work at once, Ned visits the White House to inform Miss Johnston of the fact. Explaining the situation to her mother, the girl, "Mary," is astonished by that lady's emotion at the mention of Dabbs' name. The cook arrives, and Mary, with Ned, goes to the village for groceries. They are seen by Dorothy Selden. Mrs. Johnston, worried over financial troubles, is bothered by Dorothy, who warns her there is something suspicious about Ned Carter.

CHAPTER V.—There is something about Mary vaguely familiar to Dabbs, and he is highly interested in village gossip concerning the mother and daughter. Mrs. Johnston accompanies Mary to an inn for luncheon. Dabbs sees Mrs. Johnston and is obviously perturbed. He informs Ned he has something on his mind that he would like to tell him.

CHAPTER VI.—Claude reveals to Ned a romance of his early life. He had married, while at college, and under peculiar circumstances, and his *wife left him the day after the cere*mony. He is convinced "Mrs. Johnston" is his wife, "Polly," and naturally wants to know, Who is Mary?

CHAPTER VII.—Mrs. Johnston tells Mary they are practically penniless, through a trustee's defalcation. She plans an appeal to Loren Rangeley, her banker, and Mary endeavors to dissuade her. While with Ned, Mary falls into a pool. Ned gets her out, unhurt, but the incident reveals to him the real nature of his feelings toward the girl.

CHAPTER VIII.—In an attempt to clear up the situation, Dabbs sends Mrs. Johnston $500, which he had from her when they were married. She keeps the money, satisfying Dabbs she is his wife, but, Who is Mary? Mrs. Johnston and her daughter go to New York, on Dabbs' money. Dabbs tells Ned he knows he is Rangeley's son, and the two men arrange to follow the women. "Polly" informs Loren Rangeley she and Mary are going to Europe.

CHAPTER IX.—Mrs. Johnston tells her daughter something of her early life and poverty, and acknowledges that Dabbs is Mary's father. The girl is pleased, declaring she likes Dabbs.

CHAPTER X.—Claude, at a meeting with Mary, is overjoyed when the girl gladly acknowledges their relationship. He has for some time been convinced the girl is his daughter. She tells him she and her mother are sailing to Europe next day. Dabbs promises to meet Mary there. She tells him her mother is in financial straits, but declines his offer of pecuniary assistance, believing him a comparatively poor man.

CHAPTER XI.—In Venice, Ned, after some shrewd maneuvering, meets Mary. His strenuous lovemaking somewhat disconcerts the girl, and to make matters worse he steals a kiss while they are in a gondola and hidden from *public view. She is, of course, out*wardly furious, but in her heart—

CHAPTER XII.—Mary, unknown to her mother, takes dinner with her father and Ned. Arriving home, she tells of the dinner and of her meeting with her father in New York. Polly, who in her mind pictures Dabbs as a fat, middle-aged country grocer, is for leaving Venice at once, but Mary refuses to go. On her mother declaring her intention of wiring to Loren Rangeley, which the girl knows means she has made up her mind to divorce Dabbs and marry Rangeley for his money, Mary warns her such a move will mean their separation.

"Come in, Mary," called her mother.

Polly was sitting up in bed, reading, or pretending to read, and before Mary could scold her for reading after a headache, Polly began:

"To save trouble, Mary, and to avoid unnecessary conversation, you were not with the Farleys tonight. They all went to bed an hour ago, and in the hall I heard young Farley asking his mother where you were and why you did not dine with them tonight."

Mary looked at her mother, for half a second without speaking. She had not expected to be caught quite so soon.

"I went to Father's hotel, and dined with him and Mr. Carter." The whole truth seemed what the situation called for.

Polly Johnston gasped and leaned forward. She had gotten more than she bargained for. "Your father! Claude Dabbs?"

"Yes," said Mary demurely. "I like him tremendously, Mother."

"How long have you known him—to like tremendously?"

"Since the day before we left New York. I met him in the druggist's and went to his hotel there, the Langdon. and—"

"Mary! Was it Claude who told you to keep me in ignorance?"

"Oh no, Mother. I thought you might not like my knowing him. But I simply had to. Father doesn't like secrecy a bit. He wants to take care of us both."

"How like Claude," Polly sneered. "Take care of us both behind the grocery shop, I suppose."

"Oh Mother! How can you? He seems perfectly capable of taking care of any number of people. I trust him."

Mary came to the bed and looked at her mother. To Polly Johnston, Mary seemed suddenly older, and different. Who shall say how little, or how much, a kiss may alter a maiden's character and outlook on life?

"Mother, I won't run away again. If you can't stay and face facts—and Father, you will have to leave me behind to do it."

There was a long look between those who had been mother and daughter only a moment ago, and were now two women of different ages measuring each other like opponents.

It was Polly who spoke first, and though her voice was not raised, Mary shivered, for never had her mother spoken like that before. "Very well then, we stay. You can see all you want of your father, openly."

"And you?"

Polly Johnston laughed. "You are not the only one who can keep a secret." She pushed the canopy aside and reached for a telegraph blank and her fountain pen on the table beside her bed. "I shall wire Loren Rangeley in Paris, tonight."

"Loren Rangeley in Paris!" Mary went white, started to speak again and turned away.

Polly Johnston, beginning to write her message, looked up eagerly to see if the girl would weaken. It was the first time they had ever pitted their wills against each other, and it was distinctly unpleasant. She wished to Heaven they had not started this, or that the child would give in, instead of standing there white and desperate.

"Mother," Mary was facing her, and, though there were tears behind her eyes, her voice was steady. "You know I hate Loren Rangeley. He's the coldest, hardest man I know, and if you—if you divorce my father—to marry him, for his money—I'll try to feel the same toward you, Mother, but I never will!"

She was gone. The door closed behind her before Polly could get to her feet. She started to follow her, and then stood still, breathing fast. What could she do? If she refused Loren Rangeley and his money, what had she to fall back on but C. M. Dabbs?

That night Mary cried herself to sleep.

CHAPTER XIII

In the morning, having breakfasted in their respective rooms, as was their custom, Mary, dressed for the street, came to her mother's door.

At the sight of Mary's pale face, Polly's heart misgave her. She knew that her own face was pale, but she was able to say, in the chilliest of tones: "If you have made any plan to meet your father this morning, I will not interfere."

"No," Mary answered in a tone equally lifeless. "We do not meet until three o'clock, at the Accademia."

"In that case, suppose we go to the church of San Zaccaria this morning. I want to see the Gellini Madonna there, and we can walk."

It had all the appearance of a pleasantly idle morning. Though Polly held her head high, she was suffering. The Polly Johnston, who smiled faintly at any remark and stared unflinchingly into the fierce Italian sunlight, was a woman fighting desperately against a terrified realization of what loneliness might mean to a middle-aged woman who had not looked ahead or contemplated it. A hundred times that morning Polly was ready to cry quarter; ready for any compromise that would leave her her Mary.

Claude Dabbs might have guessed something of Polly's plight and been sorry. He had fought his own fight, and come through it whole, like the sturdy soul he was. Had Polly but known it, here, in Venice, was a Claude who was actuated by no small, revengeful feelings, but moved only by a real and very friendly desire to help, and also to share Mary. But Polly, shuddering at the thought of lonely years without Mary's companionship, turned away with equal distaste from the thought of sharing Mary, and the grocery shop, with Claude.

How could Mary conceive that her mother, so long distrustful and scornful of any emotion save the maternal, could turn with relief to the thought of cold, circumspect Loren Rangeley, as contrasted with the Claude she remembered. Claude represented to Polly all the primitive emotions, with the disagreeable background of a shop. Not having seen Claude for twenty-odd years, she created an image of a fat, middle-aged grocer with the uncontrolled emotions of a young man. Always there was that shop in the background, and the image caused her to shudder.

"If you wish to dine with your father tonight, I shall not mind," she said to Mary as they turned toward the hotel and luncheon.

"Be reasonable, Mother," Mary pleaded. "Don't make me feel I've lost my mother because I've found my father."

Having made up her mind, Polly was one to carry things through gaily. "I'm afraid it will work out that way, but, of course, I've nothing to do with it."

"You have everything!" protested Mary vehemently. "It's all in your hands. Don't you see that Father—well, he just can't—unless you give some sign."

Polly's laugh did not ring pleasantly in her daughter's ears. "Claude Dabbs has been stating his case rather cleverly, I see."

Mary stood still on the bridge leading to their hotel, regardless of the crowd of chattering, staring Italians who were passing by. "Oh Mother, you don't get Father at all. He doesn't think he has any case. He thinks he must leave it to you. He feels he can't bring himself to your attention. Mother, it's awfully—delicate of him. You must see that."

"I only see that he is taking you from me, and I can see neither delicacy, nor any other evidence of good feeling in the process. Since it has to be endured, I'll endure, but I'm not kissing the hand that deals the blow. You will please discontinue the discussion, as long as you are in public, unless you can control yourself."

For the hundredth time that day poor Mary wondered why it was that those who loved one most, could, and did, so surely wound one. "I wasn't *really going to cry, but if you will pre*tend to look at the boats for a moment, I'll pull myself together."

With the pulling together process, Mary hardened her heart. If Mother was going to shut her out completely, she could not, of course, confide in Mother. Ordinarily she might have told her mother a little, if not quite all, about Ned Carter, especially as she had remembered thus late in the day Dorothy Selden's warning. Mary would like to know now just what it was Dorothy had hinted. But Polly Johnston barred every avenue of approach, and continued to keep the bars up during luncheon. So Mary went to the Accademia twenty minutes early, with mutiny in her heart.

Ned stood waiting in the doorway. His face was turned from her as she alighted from her gondola, and Mary had time to study it.

It was extraordinary, the effect this man had upon her. She did not like it. She was used to men, and to their attentions. Why should this good-looking grocer's assistant stir her in this manner? For one moment she contemplated flight. The next moment she rejected the thought as cowardly. Ned caught sight of her, and the look on his face revealed to Mary the extent to which this young man was enamored. Along with all the other emotions, she felt a sudden sense of power.

"Everything! Where can we go and talk quietly until Father comes?"

"We could take a gondola."

"No! We could not!"

"Oh I say—" Ned began.

Mary interrupted. "I simply won't! Do be sensible and help me. What shall I say to Father? Mother found out last night. She was waiting for me when I came in."

"I thought her far too clever to be fooled long," commented Ned.

Mary continued: "Mother sent for —er—telegraphed to Mr. Rangeley, Mr. Loren Rangeley, to join her here."

Ned's exclamation made her look up, surprised. "How can you know what that means?" she asked, astonished.

"I—I'm not quite sure," Ned managed to say.

"It means that Mother will try to divorce my father and marry that cold-blooded fish—"

"Mary, don't! Loren Rangeley's my father!"

Only Ned's strong arm saved Mary from stumbling, perilously near the canal. "How can he be your father? Why, you're—"

"I'm Ned Carter Rangeley. I quarreled with my father. I told you all about that, long ago. That is, I told you everything except his name. You see, I wanted you to love—the grocer's clerk."

"Mary! You don't mean that."

"I do. How could that be the reason for calling yourself 'Carter'? You did it before you ever saw me."

"I was tired of being just my father's son. I wanted Claude to like me for myself. Mary, you must believe me."

"I see my father," Mary interrupted. "I'm going to him."

"Not until I—Mary, marry me now, and then your mother won't marry my father, and Claude will have his chance."

"Utter and complete nonsense!"

"It isn't nonsense. You know it isn't. Mary, look at me Is it such utter nonsense?"

"Father!" called Mary, moving quickly forward. "Here we are."

They moved together into the Accademia, and as Ned stopped to pay the fees, Claude and Mary went up stairs together.

"What's wrong, darling?" asked Claude.

Mary put her hand on his arm and drew him into a little room at one side, empty of sightseers for the moment. She noticed, with extreme annoyance, that it contained two or three paintings by Bellini. She feared she would always forget their beauty and only associate them with this most troublesome day of her life. "Mother knows," she said in a low voice.

"Well, that's all right," Claude answered easily. "Polly must know, sooner or later. I meant, what's the trouble between you and Ned?"

Mary decided that her father would be safe. "He wants me to marry him."

"He's Loren Rangeley's son."

"He couldn't help that. Don't you like him, Mary? Ned has sudden ways, but he's a nice boy."

"Father," announced Mary irrelevantly, "if you'll come behind that easel I'll kiss you."

"Sure," said Claude.

They came from behind the easel, presently. Claude studiously avoided a glance at the painting, which he privately thought too ugly for words.

"Don't ask me to look at any more big, fat women who wouldn't take any exercise, lost their figures, and yet would have their portraits painted," he begged Mary. "Let's find Ned."

But Mary protested. "He can wait. You don't know everything yet, Father. Mother's sent for Loren Rangeley. She's going to marry him for his money."

"Loren's got quite a pile," Claude agreed calmly, "but then, there's me. She'll have to get rid of me, first. Unless she has?" He cocked an inquiring eye at Mary. Mary shook her head.

Ned joined them. Claude looked at him critically.

"Mary told me about you."

Mary gasped. Father was terribly direct.

"If there has to be a husband, right away," Claude observed to the Bellini in that room, "I'd rather it was Ned."

Ned Stood Waiting in the Doorway.

"If you'll come behind the picture of that big, thick woman, who's been roughly handled," Ned told him, "I'll kiss you."

"Don't be sickening," Claude warned him, as they moved away toward the entrance. "Where can we three go to talk about our lives in, general, and have a little privacy. No churches, no palaces, and no picture galleries," he warned. "My feet ache at the very thought of them, and they are all full of gabby guides." He paused near the gondola steps, and considered a moment. "We can take a gondola—"

He was unprepared and a little startled by the mirth of his companions, but continued gravely and without waiting for an explanation, "and go to my sitting room."

He handed Mary in, and turning to Ned, surveyed him cooly. "On second thoughts, which are often best, we'll leave you to find your way there yourself, and slowly. I've something to say to Mary, and," he added with a look that quelled Ned's tendency to rebel, "there are times when a father and daughter actually like to be alone together, though you don't seem to think so."

A fatherly squeeze of Ned's arm helped Ned to interpret these remarks and to withdraw with better grace than Mary expected.

"What a comfort you are, Father."

"You don't have to marry Ned, you know, unless you happen to want to."

"Don't worry! Loren Rangeley will put his foot down. He knows Mother's money's gone. I'm only a poor grocer's daughter."

"Is your mother's money all gone?"

Claude considered her gravely. "Do you mind the grocery business, very much?"

Mary patted his arm. "Of course I don't. Only, Father, you're foolish to spend so much money traveling. When I go back we'll need to alter things a little. I can save you money by waiting behind the counter or keeping the books, until we see what I'm best fitted for. I do hope you'll let me ride around in the car with you when you deliver orders."

Claude's arm tightened about her. "You're my girl, all right," he said with husky voice. "But that isn't necessary. As a matter of fact, Loren will jump at the chance of getting my daughter for his son. Ned, of course, doesn't know this," he added quickly. "Ned thinks he's asking you to put up with what he's got. He has some of his mother's money, and he can earn more. He quarreled with Loren, you know."

"Why should Loren Rangeley 'jump' at me?"

Her father looked at her. She was so pretty, so lovable, and so unlike Polly, in that money meant so little to her.

"You see, daughter, I'm 'SCOUREEN' the 'Dirt Destroyer'." Then, in answer to her look of amazement: "You've seen the signs, surely. They're everywhere. It's a good article, too. I invented it out of Mom's old kitchen cleaner recipe. Then I had an idea for a fancy tin can. It caught on. It's years since I've been a poor grocer. At first I kept quiet about it—well, because of Polly. I was fool enough to fancy she'd come back, if I had money. I thought I'd keep it dark and go and find her myself, and surprise her. But I never did. There was a time, when I had no money, when I really wanted to find her; but after considering everything—well, I just couldn't. Remember, I didn't know about you."

"It kept piling up." Claude continued. "The money, I mean. If a man failed, and I as agent, mind you," and he twinkled at Mary over this time-honored joke, "loaned him money, blamed if his business wouldn't boom. He'd be paying it back to me in no time and I'd have all that spare cash on my hands. Money breeds money. I've spent all I wanted to, in a quiet way. I lived behind the grocery mostly to keep Aunt Lyddy happy, but I've had fun building and remodeling houses to suit me. The White house you and Polly lived in was one of them. I own nearly all of Clover Hollow. But, till I met Ned here, I never really enjoyed traveling about and using money on myself. I'm a kind of timid man about some things. With Ned, it's been grand. And you! When I knew about you. I knew what the money was for. Think of the fun I'll get out of just buying things for you! Now that Polly knows you know me, can't we go and do some shopping? I want to buy you all the things I've wanted to hang on somebody—and didn't know you were waiting for me."

"Father, we mustn't be reckless. I can't take it quite all in. How many thousand have you?"

"It runs nearer to millions, Mary."

"Mercy, what will Mother say?"

Claude, watching her face, saw it change.

"What are you afraid of?" he asked bluntly.

But Mary could not, or would not, say. Her father helped her from the gondola.

When they entered the sitting room, he said: "You're not afraid of me?"

Mary shook her head. "I simply love you!"

"H'm, I'm always afraid of those I love getting away from me."

He watched her remove her hat, and then move about the room. It was lovely, she told him, to be in his rooms. Still Claude had a feeling she was not at rest.

"If it's Ned, you needn't be uneasy," he told her, cryptically. But Mary apparently did not hear.

Claude went to the balcony and looked down.

"Here's Ned now. Pretty prompt, you are. I said half an hour."

"It seemed half a century," Ned told him, coming straight toward Mary. "Well, have you talked me over thoroughly, and come to the right conclusion?"

"Funny, isn't it," drawled Claude, as he saw Mary color, "but we had other things to talk about. When Mary mentions it, we'll take up your case. The question to consider just now is, are you prepared to face your father?"

"Father! Coming here?"

Claude nodded, surveying Ned coolly, but avoiding Mary's eyes. "You see our advantage. We can de*cide what we're going to do—and pull* the strings."

Ned, still astonished, looked at him in silence. He wondered, confusedly, whether this could be the explanation. Was Claude Dabbs the agent for Loren Rangeley? There was no time to follow that train of thought at present, but he would return to it. "I see. Take the wind out of Mrs. Johnston's sails, eh!"

Mary rose with decision. "I'm going back to Mother. Father, you can see that I can't—"

"Can't join in with a lot of men to let a woman down, you mean?"

Mary looked at him dubiously. "I—well, something like that, only—"

"Only you wouldn't have put it that way. That's called sex-antagonism, daughter. Don't you trust me any more than that? I'm a man, but do you think I'd hurt you, or let Polly down for any man?"

"Father, it's all perfectly horrid. I'm so mixed up. I love you, and I do trust you, but Mother—well, she's mother."

"Sure," agreed Claude. "It would all be quite plain and simple if Polly hadn't muddled things up. It's the children who suffer from mixed motives and marriages. Well, my girl, we'll make it plain and simple again. All I ask of you is to stay here and give Mr. Rangeley, the elder, some tea, and keep him waiting while I go and talk to your mother."

Mary gasped. "Mother will never see you!"

"I think better of Polly than that," said Claude, and was gone.

CHAPTER XIV

Mrs. Polly Johnston, returning from an aimless walk about the piazza, was told by the elevator boy that he had just been given a message to the effect that a gentleman was waiting for her in the lounge.

"His card," demanded Polly, wrinkling her nose a little in front of the mirror to see if she needed powder. The boy handed her a slip of paper on which was written, "To see Mrs. Johnston, with a message from Mr. Rangeley."

"Take me up first," Polly instructed the boy, "and have the gentleman told I will be down in a moment."

She went to her room, straightened her hat, powdered her nose, tucked a stray lock away under her hat, surveyed herself carefully in the mirror, and sauntered back to ring for the elevator again, wondering about the message.

Claude had chosen a secluded and recessed corner, from which he could obtain an unobstructed view of those who entered from the lobby into the lounge. He wondered about Polly, after all these years. What was her mind toward Loren Rangeley? What changes had time wrought? He had only that momentary glimpse in the Hillsborough inn to go by.

When he saw her he forgot everything else. Changes! To be sure she had changed, as twenty years must change every man or woman, but she was Polly, and as he admitted to himself, still lovely enough to hold any man's glances. He saw how she was stared at as she came in indifferently.

She Faced Him.

She was all in black. A black satin cape, lined with Delft blue, hung from her shoulders, and a hat of the same lovely color on her ruddy hair. She gave a swift look about her, and Claude rose.

As Claude came toward her, Polly stared, then her eyes changed and the pupils contracted. He had been much in her thoughts lately, and despite the years, she knew this must be the man *she most dreaded. Indeed, after the*first long look, she actually recognized him. Polly stopped for a moment, then came on. Claude stood in the corner waiting for her, and she faced him.

"No," Claude answered her steadily.

"How are you, Polly? I am here with a message about Loren Rangeley. He will be at my hotel in half an hour. in time for afternoon tea, and the idea was that you should join us there to meet him."

"Whose idea?" asked Polly. "And who are us?"

"My idea," Claude answered as promptly, "and us are Mary and Ned Rangeley, Loren's son."

"I don't think I know him."

"Yes, I think you do, but you know him as Ned Carter. His name is Ned Carter Rangeley. He was at Peace Valley, with me."

"Oh, the young man who drove the car?"

"Yes," admitted Claude and waited.

He had not to wait long. "I don't like your idea," Polly told him, looking past him out of the window. "And," she continued, still gazing past him, "I have no desire to be one of 'us'."

She rose as though the interview was at an end. Claude rose, too, but stood so that he blocked her way.

"Sit down, Polly," he said, "and hear why it might be better to change your mind."

Polly hesitated. Unless she desired a scene, there was no getting past that solid figure. She had to look at him now. The look relieved her. The man before her had changed with the years, but he was neither a boor nor a clown. She had not been so fatally wrong about Claude, years ago. There was "a something" about Claude Dabbs.

Polly sat down.

SCHOOL PRESENTED WITH FLAG POSTER BY LOCAL POST OF AMERICAN LEGION

Gives Proper Ways Of Displaying Flag

WIN TENTH IN TRACK MEET

At the high school assembly Friday morning, the student body was presented with a large flag poster, giving the flag code, the different methods of displaying the flag, suggestions for state legislation regarding its uses, cautions against ill treatment of it, and the flag pledge. The American Legion was the donor, and the high school is very grateful for their thoughtfulness in presenting it to us. Mr. Klemme explained the pictures, and the statements of the poster and made announcements regarding the program for Decoration Day, and the meaning which the day should have for everyone. We were pleased with his talk and again wish to express our appreciation to the American Legion.

At our Monday morning assembly, Miss Giesman, our school nurse, gave an extremely interesting talk on Health to the high school. She read the statistics in the Belmond Junior and Senior high schools, and showed the importance of health, and the means of obtaining it. She especially cautioned us to take care of our teeth and eyes. Another thing she mentioned was the need of improving our posture, both for appearance's sake as well as for our physical benefit. We certainly enjoyed the beneficial and instructive half hour with Miss Giesman.

Saturday, May 21, Track Meets were held at the district centers of the eight track districts. Belmond was entered in the meet at Mason City, the representatives from here being Clifford Johnson, Bernard Davenport, Russell Brewer, Max Elder, Joe Sprenzel, Duane Jenison and Albert Rabe. There were 30-odd schools entered in the meet, and Belmond succeeded in capturing 10th place, having seven points to our credit. Clifford Johnson won first in the 100-yard dash, and we have hopes of his placing in the State Meet at Ames, Saturday, May 28. Clifford's record this time was exceeded by only two persons in any of the district meets held Saturday. Bernard Davenport won third in the mile run, and he too, will take part in the meet at Ames, which consists of all participants of the district meets winning first, second and third places.

In September 1924 he was taken to Oakdale Sanitarium for treatment, but the desired results were not obtained. He passed away Saturday, May 14th, at 11:00 o'clock p. m., at the age of twenty-three years, five months and five days.

In 1922 his mother preceded him in death, and on the 25th of March 1927 his brother, Harm, who was at the Sanitarium with him being afflicted with the same disease. GOLDFIELD BANKER TO BE ASKED WHY HE DOESN'T PAY $5,000 FINE

Was Found Guilty Of Fradulent Banking At Last Term

B. W. McElhinney, Goldfield banker who was convicted May 4 on a charge of fradulent banking and fined $5,000, has been cited to appear in court Friday, May 27, at 1:30 o'clock to show cause why he has not paid his fine and to account for his property.

McElhinney went thru bankruptcy after his bank closed, but when his business was settled by the trustees in bankruptcy it was announced publicly that $9,000 was returned to him after all creditors had been paid. The exact amount of the return will be evidenced by records of the bankruptcy court.

Immediately after the fine was assessed an execution was issued against him and his property to cover the amount of the fine, but the official whose duty it was to serve this execution could not find any property on which to levy, hence the action to bring McElhinney into court for an accounting.

Very often when a fine is assessed against an offender who is found guilty the sentence also provides that in the event of failure to pay the fine he shall be committed to jail for a period of time which will meet the demands of the fine. Yet in this case Judge Clock did not so specify in the judgment, and unless an execution can be made to stick against him he will have to stand this questioning. The defendant was supposed to file a bond for $7,500 when he appealed the decision of the district court, the bond to cover fines and costs of appeal for both parties, but this he has failed to do.

Two other charges remain against McElhinney to be tried at a later term of court and which would be determined by the same evidence that was submitted in the case in which conviction resulted.

Edna Laura Doyle was granted a divorce from Howard J. Doyle with the stipulation that he should pay $25 a month for the support of a minor child.

Dewey LaRue was taken into custody at Dows, Monday, charged with breaking and entering the Sam Ferguson meat market at 5:00 o'clock Monday morning. It is alleged that he took $60 from the cash drawer. LaRue is in jail here, unable to give bond. LaRue has a record of having been engaged in previous law violations.

Vern Durham, arrested for robbery at the Rock Island depot, was taken to Toledo, Saturday, by a state parole officer. The lad was enjoying a parole under custody of his father until he committed the offense which again made him amendable to the law. He has been out for two years, and will now remain in custody indefinitely.

Mrs. Floyd McCreery, has been appointed deputy clerk under R. V. Goslin. She succeeds Mrs. Ullo McGrath, who has been a very efficient assistant in the office.

Holliday Bros. seek recovery of $1,000 on a note given by Henry & Stokes and John B. Henry.

L. A. Andrew, receiver for the Citizens State bank of Eagle Grove, asks judgment on a certain promissory note made by Cyrus H. Porter for $16,175.00 in favor of above bank.

Anna L. Martin seeks to recover on a promissory note given by J. W. Porter and wife, for $3000, to the Citizens State bank of Eagle Grove, which the plaintiff purchased from the said bank.

Claiming that the defendants are about to transfer their property with a purpose to defraud creditors, Receiver L. A. Andrew of the Citizens State bank of Eagle Grove asks judgment against Lewis J. Lilleskau and Olga Lilleskau in the sum of $3,170.52.

First Liberty Savings bank of Eagle Grove has entered suit against J. F. Lynch to collect an alleged past due promissory note in the amount of $3100 with interest.

L. A. Andrew, receiver for Citizens State bank of Eagle Grove, asks judgment against Tom Johnson on a promissory note on which there is still due $2,402.61.—Monitor.

CIRCUS IS GOOD BUT DRAWS SLIM CROWDS HERE TUESDAY

Cook & Coles circus which showed here Tuesday was good, but drew slim crowds at both performances. The wet weather had cleared up enough that day so the farmers were putting in all time possible in the fields. The circus as a whole was a pleasing attraction, their costumes were new and the acts were good. It is a new concern, this being the third stop of the season.

LUNCHEON CLUB MEETS

The Business Men's Luncheon club met Thursday noon in regular session at the hotel. The matter of the band concerts was taken up, and the committee reported practically the entire amount needed had been raised, and a motion was made that the committee be discharged from further duty. The chairman was instructed to appoint a committee to take a vote of those contributing toward the expenses of the band, to determine their preference on concert nights. John Greenlander and Steve Antonio were appointed by the chairman, and took the vote, which resulted 274 to 162 for Wednesday night. Each dollar given permitted the giver to vote once. Dr. Parsons then gave a brief report of the meeting of Belmond citizens with the State Highway Commission recently, relative to the paving of primary road number 15.

CORNELIUS ESK DIES

Cornelius Esk, son of Eberhard Esk a Pleasant township farmer residing about four miles southeast of Belmond, died at his home Monday noon of this week, following a short illness from pneumnia. He was taken ill about a week ago and pneumonia developed rapidly. Funeral services will be held today, Thursday, in charge of Rev. O. G. Poppen, pastor of the Immanuel Reformed church in Pleasant township.

Aug. Foss is building an addition to his shoe shop, in the space between his building and the Herald-Press office.

COMPLETE ARRANGEMENTS FOR DECORATION DAY EXERCISES

THE LITTLE GREEN TENTS

By Walt Mason

The little green tents where the soldiers sleep,
And the sun beams play, and the women weep,
Are covered with flowers today.
Who were young and stalwart in sixty-two,
When they went to the war away.
The little green tents are built of sod,
And they are not long and they are not broad,
But the soldiers have lots of room,
And the sod is a part of the land they saved.
When the flag of the enemy darkly waved,
The symbol of dole and doom,
The little green tents are a thing divine,
The little green tent is a country's shrine.
Where patriots kneel and pray,
And the old men left, so old, so few,
Were young and stalwart in sixty-two,
When they went to the war away.

While the bride is a stranger to Belmond people, she is one of Lake Mills' most popular young ladies with a charming personality that will win her friends in her new home. The Independent joins with their friends in wishing them success and happiness.

OBITUARY

Death entered into the home of Mr. and Mrs. George T. Anderson early Saturday morning and called away the only son, Otis George, age seven years, four months and twenty-two days. Little Otis suffered throughout his short life of chronic troubles in the head and throat. Early this spring he was attacked with the whooping cough and measles. Bronchial pneumonia followed these, and succeeded to sap out the little strength there was left. Funeral services were held Sunday afternoon at the home and in Trinity Lutheran church. A large number were present including several relatives and friends from Kanawha. The many floral decorations bespoke the sympathy of relatives and friends. Immediately after the services the remains were taken to the Kanawha cemetery for burial. The sympathy of the community is extended to the bereaved parents and the three sisters, Norma, Josephine and Lucile.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to thank the friends and neighbors for their kindness and sympathy in the illness and death of our son and brother, Otis, and for their floral tributes.

Wright county voters can well afford to study seriously the provisions of the new Iowa road law, which, after July 1, places control of the primary roads in the hands of the State Highway Commission. Iowa is going to have paved roads; there are no ifs, ands or buts about it. Will Wright county get in on the the program? It is solely up to each county. There is no cost to the taxpayers of a county in securing the paved roads outside of the election necessary to vote the bonds wherewith to pay for them. The state assumes the payment of both bonds and interest. A summary of the new road law, and what it means is given in a recent bulletin issued by the Iowa Good Roads Association. This bulletin is given here that voters in this end of Wright county may familiarize themselves with the new law. Sooner or later the question of paving the primary roads in Wright county will come up for election. Of the two primary highways in the county, No. 15 should by all means be paved first. There are numerous reasons for this which do not need to be gone into at this time. Study the following brief summary of the new law, so that when an election is called you will be intelligently informed on the subject. The bulletin is as follows:

The counties that go ahead under the new state highway laws and issue bonds to complete their primary road systems, as far as possible, will be far ahead of those counties that do not take such action immediately, says the weekly bulletin of the Iowa Good Roads Association this week. The bulletin further goes on to outline the advantages accruing to counties that vote bonds under the new law.

"The salient features of the new law are as follows": the statement says.

"First—After July 1, the highway commission has absolute power over primary roads and primary road funds. The counties will have nothing whatever to do with the primary roads or funds. It will be the duty of the highway commission to complete all primary roads the money becomes available, using their judgment as to as to what roads should be completed first.

"Second—The special assessment of 12 1-2 percent against abutting and adjacent propert for paving is abolished, and all special assessments heretofore levied will be refunded.

"Third—The state is required to pay the interest as well as the principal on primary road bonds issued by any county for paving or graveling.

"First—Nothing; and in the course of years their primary roads will be graded and graveled, as the money becomes available.

"Second—Vote as many county primary road bonds as possible and pave as much of their primary road system as they can with that money. Grade and gravel the balance of the primary roads in the county, beginning now. All bonds so voted will be paid by the state both as to principal and interest. The only cost to the county will be the cost of holding a special election.

"First—The paving of the main highways across the county and graveling of all other primary roads within the next two or three years, or as soon as the work can be economically done.

"Second—The cost to the county is nothing more than they are paying now to do the work. The state must pay the interest and principal of the bonds voted, provided, that the amount of the principal and interest plus the cost of the maintenance do not exceed the amount the county would receive if the primary road fund was allotted under the area basis.

"Third—If the main highways are paved, the cost of maintenance would be reduced to about one-fourth of what it would be if these roads were graveled.

"Fourth—The average operation cost of motor vehicles on paved roads is 2.6 cents a mile less than over a dirt road, and 1.8 cents per mile less than over a gravel road. These figures are furnished by Professor Agg of the engineering department of the State College at Ames, after years of investigation, and have been corroborated by other states and by many large concerns using fleets of cars.

"Fifth—The paving of these highways means that they can be traveled every day in the year.

"If any county votes primary road bonds, the taxpayers must underwrite, or guarantee the payment of the bonds both as to principal and interest. On the ballot must be set out the amount of bonds the supervisors are authorized to issue and the maximum number of mills the supervisors are authorized to levy, provided, however, that no levy will be made unless the primary road fund is insufficient to pay the principal and interest.

"The primary road fund is sufficient now to pay this principal and interest, and each year is increasing so that it is believed that no risk whatever is taken.

"The taxpayers in these counties, and particularly those who live away from these primary roads and on the secondary roads, should fully understand that the voting of these primary road bonds will not in any way whatever delay, take from, or add to the county or township roads. The building of the county and township roads will not be affected at all.

"The handicap in voting county primary road bonds is the limitation of 3 percent any county can vote in road bonds. This is a serious handicap to counties having a large primary road mileage and a large county indebtedness. It will prevent many counties from voting enough bonds to pave those roads which under the state plan would be paved.

"But even if a county cannot vote enough bonds to more than one-half complete its primary road system, it would appear that the taxpayers would be very foolish if they did not do this, for the reason that it hastens the improvement of the primary roads just that much.

"The voting of these county bonds is merely anticipating the primary road fund that will be expended in the county in due course of time. The state is obligated to build these roads and will build them. If the counties assist the state in lending their credit, they will get the roads much sooner. If they do nothing, they must wait until the state can build them from current revenues.

"No county can vote bonds until its project has the approval of the highway commission. Thus, there is no danger of counties voting more bonds than the state primary road fund can retire without a tax levy."

WOMEN LIVE LONGER

Women live, on an average, two years longer than men, so statistics tell us. Woman has long been known as the "weaker sex." She is so, in lifting, stunts which require great strength, and in feeling well for many years of her life. But her lord, who has spent the most of his life-time hale and hearty and feeling fine and fit, succumbs to the arch enemy two years before his more frail helpmeet, who has nursed delicate health most of the years of her maturity.

Woman has a strength which endures a long strain, but is not equal to a severe. She endures child bearing and the constant giving of her vitality to her children's care, and though she may drag through it, never knowing a real vigorous day, yet she will survive and outlive her sturdy husband.

What is the reason that men do not hold out as long? Is it because they do not take such good care of their health and particularly of their eating in the years of life after they have ceased to be most active? The annual health examination, the examination on one's birthday, would prolong the lives of many adults past forty, by discovering ailments in their first stages when they could be cured.

MAY DAY-CHILD HEALTH

Hundreds of communities this year celebrated May Day as Child Health Day. Health commissioners, county, city and village officers, lawmakers, schools, and women's clubs joined in the ceremonies.

In some places, birth registration was stressed, and a new tree was planted near the home of every new baby born on May Day. Commercial firms contributed advertising for the cause, and many department stores distributed pamphlets for mothers.

Factors emphasized, as contributing to Child Health were: the drinking of more milk, the use of pasteurized or certified milk, a clean water supply, proper sewage, an investigation of the sanitary condition of the school houses, a pushing of the park and playgrund movement, popular education as to vaccination and immunization against diphtheria, smallpox and typhoid fever, and community health stations where mothers may bring their children for medical examination and advice.

As for the children themselves, they sang and danced on the green, in festival and pageantry, as happy children should.

FORMAL GARDENS

Formal lines in landscaping are to be avoided, the artists tell us. Straight lines are the shortest distance between two points, but there their desirability ends. Curved, waving, and irregular and broken lines are more beautiful and graceful. In planting the home grounds we should not seek those straight regular lines at the top of our hedges—all trimmed just so, but bushes of irregular height and variety of foliage should gradually grade off and disappear or blend with their background, all the outlines blending harmoniously, as they do in Nature, and not any feature of the landscape standing out stiff and formal.

This is the reason the round or square or rectangular flower beds are not good. When you raise a vegetable garden or flowers for cuttings, straight rows are more useful; but if your flowers are for decorative purposes in the yard, they should be as gay groups or clusters in the background or along a walk or as a border for shrubbery, or along the foundation of the house. But in the latter place they should be in clumps, with the green sward reaching to the foundation at places.

Variety is the beauty of a garden—a mass of one thing here, another there, or gradually grading off from one variety to another, or a group of vegetation, with one or a few of several species, all harmonizing, supplementing and complementing one another, and leading the eye on with interest from one delight to another. The formal garden, with rows just so and bushes and trees and hedges all of even height and width, is too far away from Nature to be really beautiful. It is more of a curiosity.

TO SHAMPOO A CHILD

Most small children have a fear of leaning their heads forward over the bowl and letting them be washed in the usual way. They are likely to insist on raising their heads erect and so letting the suds run down into their eyes and the water drip down their necks. This aggravates their horror, and makes them still more unmanageable.

To avoid the nervous strain to the child and to make it easier for the mother, lay the child on his back on the table, with the pan underneath it, and let the child lean his head back over the pan. Another way is to lay the child on the drainboard of the kitchen sink with his head toward the sink, in which the shampoo operations may proceed. One inventive mother uses the ironing board, so arranging it that the child may lie on it with his head reaching over the basin in the bath room.

THE COMMENCEMENT DRESS

There is nothing else as satisfactory for the graduation dress as white. A dainty white dress is a need in every complete summer wardrobe, so it is no extravagance to provide a pretty commencement dress. You have many sheer and filmy materials to choose from crisp organdies, lawns, swisses, and soft mulls, voiles and nets.

As to trimmings, there are many styles in vogue: ruffles, medallions, insertion, insets of lace, tucking, shirring, puffing, drawn work, and hemstitching. White shoes and stockings are appropriate to go with the commencement dress.

PLAYTHINGS

Money spent in toys is well invested. These not only give joy to children but they are their tools of development. They are wonderful time savers and peace preverers for mothers and keep children happily employed and out of mischief. Are your children well supplied with sand piles, toy engines, wagons, picture books, dolls, balls, jumping ropes and roller skates?

SEASONABLE HINTS

Sort over your canned goods and use them up before the season of fresh fruits and vegetables arrives.

Peek into all the corners of the cellar to see if vegetables have stayed there to rot, and smell.

Paint, like charity, covers a multitude of sins. Use it on kitchen shelves, old chairs and tables and furniture which looks shabby. A coat of varnish will freshen the porch furniture.

To preserve good floors, if you do not intend to refinish them all over this year, go over the worn spots with a coat of shelac; cover this with a coat of varnish. Take care to spread the varnish out thinly around the edges of each spot treated, that it will not show up too distinctly in comparison with the rest of the floor. With rugs to break the lines, the newly finished spots will not be too evident, and the new finish will soon be worn to match the rest.

Store the winter's extra bedding on the spare bed for warm weather. Air it occasionally, on the clothes line outdoors, to prevent its becoming musty.

APRON POCKETS

To prevent the catching of your apron pockets on door-knobs as you pass, make the pockets on the under side of the apron, near the edge.

FREE AIR

We pulled a good one last week, when we gave a broken arm to Dave Finn. Never can tell what will happen, but so far as we know Dave hasn't lost the use of either arm yet. Probably doesn't want to, either. That broken arm belongs to Dick Parker, and how we ever gave it to Finn is beyond us. Must have had some of that stuff they brought in from the north last week. We apologize to Dave for trying to lay him out.

* * * *

Saw a queer sight last Saturday, one of the oddest and most unusual we ever beheld. Saw Harry Webb coming down the street driving Andy Williams' span of mules.

* * * *

Nothing queer about mules, and nothing strange about mules being driven. But it was the first time we ever saw a preacher driving mules. Didn't suppose a preacher had the—shall we say "vocabulary"—to handle mules.

* * * *

Harry was succeeding admirably, and he wasn't using any "vocabulary" either.

* * * *

Any man who can handle a team of mules successfully without using undue influence certainly ought to be a success.

* * * *

H. F. Petersen returned last week from Minnesota with the usual line of fish stories. We believe him, because he made us a present of one. Fish, not story. Any time any disciple of Izaak Walton presents us with a nice fat fish, we believe his stories.

* * * *

Other anglers will please bear this in mind.

* * * *

Pickerel accepted, but pike preferred.

* * * *

And bull heads won't be turned down.

* * * *

Petersen, Shipley, et al, have to tell their stories when they get home; they haven't got a chance as long as Dad Ingalls is around.

* * * *

Have you noticed the new style of ads Herman Schultz is running? It kind of looks like Herman was running opposition to Free Air and that classic of John's, Splinters.

* * * *

Judging from last week's attempt, Herman ought to have plenty of material to work with.

* * * *

Did you take the kids to the circus?

* * * *

Belmond's population was increased by five Saturday—five gentlemen from Ft. Dodge. Or was it St. Paul? What's a little matter of direction between bootleggers, anyway?

THE SERVICE FLAG

William Herschell

Dear little flag in the window there,
Hung with a tear and a woman's prayer,
Oh, what a wonderful flag you are.

Blue is your start in its field of white,
Dipped in the red that was born of fight,
Born of the blood that our forbears shed,
To raise your Mother, The Flag o'erhead.

And now you've come, in the frenzied day,
To speak from a window—to speak and say:
I am the voice of a soldier son,
Gone to be gone 'till the victory's won.

I am the flag of the Service, sir;
The flag of his mother—I speak for her
Who stands by my window and waits and fears,
But hides from others he unwept tears.

I am the flag of the wives who wait
For the safe return of a martial mate,
A mate gone forth where the war god thrives,
To save from sacrifice other men's wives.

I am the flag of the sweethearts true;
The often unthought-of—the sisters, too,
I am the flag of the mother's son
And won't come down 'till the victory's won.

AGRICULTURAL NEWS NOTES

CULTIVATE ONLY TO KILL WEEDS

Cultivating corn has just one big value—to kill weeds. This rather startling fact has been quite definitely established in recent years by carefully conducted experiments, according to crop specialists at Iowa State College, Ames.

In one experiment, one piece of corn was not cultivated at all—merely had the surface scraped with a hoe to keep down the weeds. The yield was slightly higher than where corn alongside had been cultivated in the usual manner. Other experiments have given similar results. It used to be thoughtthat corn should be plowed deeply to air the soil, let the sunshine down into it and for many other supposed values. Now it appears that keeping down the weeds which sap much of the moisture is the real value of cultivation.

A hill of corn with three stalks requires during a season nearly a half ton of moisture—900 pounds. Some weeds require three times as much moisture as corn for each pound of dry matter that they produce and, hence, if they are permitted to grow in the corn field, they will take much of the moisture which should go to the corn.

It used to be thought that moisture moved in the soil by capillary action, but recently the experimenters have found that there is little such movement. Instead of the moisture moving to the plant, the corn roots reach out to find the moisture. For this reason, deep cultivation, they say, is likely to do more harm than good.

In view of the recent findings in regard to corn cultivation, the use of the harrow for early corn cultivation has gained greatly in favor. The practice is growing and being recommended of planting the corn a little thicker than was formerly the custom, then harrowing rather vigorously while the corn is small.

O. W. Davis, a Boone county farmer with 250 acres of land, this year is going to depend entirely on the harrow for cultivating his corn until it becomes of such size that a harrow can no longer be used. Mr. Davis is planting his corn four kernels per hill. If harrowing kills some of the corn, he feels that he will still have enough corn. He tried out this plan last year on a small scale with satisfactory results.

Not only do the ordinary harrow, spike tooth or light draft harrow, weeder and similar implements prove effective killers of weeds in the corn while the corn is small, but they greatly speed early cultivation and reduce the time and labor required.

SOYBEANS PROVIDE LEGUME HAY

Soybeans have a distinct place in Iowa as a catch or emergency legume hay crop to be used when clover seedings fail, says H. D. Hughes, head of the Farm Crops Department, Iowa State College, mes. Mr. Hughes also recommends soybeans as a hay crop in the regular rotation because they will do well on acid soils where other legumes will not thrive and because they can be harvested at a time when they conflict very little with the rush work of summer crop cultivation.

When used as a catch crop, the beans may be planted as late as June 15, altho better yields will be secured if the beans are planted earlier, preferably from May 15 to 25. Most common Iowa weeds will have started and can be killed by cultivation before the beans are planted if the planting is not done earlier than the middle of May.

Soybeans should be given three cultivations with a harrow at time when germinating weed seed are observed, Mr. Hughes warns. The first cultivation should be given when the beans are about a half inch to one inch in height; the second when the beans reach a height of approximately three inches and the third harrowing when the beans are not over six inches high.

Beans for hay should be drilled or broadcast, according to Mr. Hughes. Both methods can be used altho drilling produces slightly higher yields, according to tests run on the Iowa experiment farm. If the beans are broadcast, as mall amount of sudan grass seed can be added, which will aid materially in keeping down the weeds in the bean crop.

The rate of seeding is from 1 to 2 bushels per acre, depending upon the size of the seed. Peking, the variety recommended for hay in all sections of the state, is a small seeded bean and should not be seeded at a rate of over a bushel or a bushel and a peck per acre.

Rather heavy seeding produces finer quality hay and aids in keeping down weeds. Stone's Ensilage, Wilson and Medium Green are other varieties found to be practical for hay production in Iowa.

ROTATION HARD ON CORN PESTS

Practicing a definite crop rotation is one of the best means of controlling such corn crop insects as cutworms, wireworms, white grubs, corn root aphis and corn root worms. Crop rotation, however, will not entirely control these pests—it merely aids.

The foregoing suggestions are those of F. G. Churchill, crops extension specialist of Iowa State College. Mr. Churchill tells of a farmer in Hancock county, S. A. Barber, of Kanawha, who has found crop rotation very helpful in checking the corn insects.

For the past 15 years Mr. Barber has followed a rotation of two years corn, one year of oats and one year of clover. The clover the past eight years has been sweet clover and red clover previous to that time. The only insect which has bothered Mr. Barber's corn is the wireworm and that on only a small piece of ground, originally very poorly drained. The injury to this piece, he says is becoming less each year, indicating that changing the crops is helping.

Other farmers in the state have experienced similarly beneficial results from crop rotation.

HENS DO NOT LAY DIRTY EGGS

When you bring in a case of clean fresh eggs and have to take the same price as some one bringing in small, dirty eggs, it doesn't add to your peace of mind.

Maybe when you get mad enough you will get together and take such action as will correct the old obsolete practice of paying the person who produces poor eggs, a premium and compelling the person who brings in good eggs to sell them at a discount.

Should every egg produced in Wright county be sold on the graded basis and marketed within two days and be as clean as when laid it would mean approximately $30,000 extra profit.

Produce dealers are somewhat slow to put this into effect as there are about three people who pay but little attention to keeping the nest clean, having straw on the floor and other practices that make for clean eggs to one who takes pride in the quality of the eggs they bring to market.

A minority proposition like this means slower progress but can be hastened by people producing a better egg and demanding a better price, through their being sold on a graded basis.

Corporations seldom force you to take a bigger price, that part of it is mostly up to you. Such a program calls for working together the first step in any cooperative movement.

If you are not willing to help yourself, why should you expect the other fellow to do it?

"EVERBEARERS" FOR COOL CLIME

For northern Iowa, a bed of everbearing strawberries is satisfactory cool weather, which do not generally prevail in central or southern Iowa, says C. V. Holsinger, extension horticulturist, Iowa State College, Ames. For the latter two sections of the state, everbearing berries are not to be recommended, he says, unless they are close to a good, cheap supply of water with which to sprinkle the bed two or three times a week.

Everbearing berries give the best yield the year that they are planted, Mr. Holsinger says, and for this reason a new bed should be planted every year, with all runners kept off of the producing bed.

Mr. Holsinger says that one northern Iowa grower produced 80 quarts of berries from a bed one rod square within five months of the time that the plants were set. These berries were planted the first of May and all blossoms were kept from the plants until July 1. All runners were kept off the plants and the bed was sprinkled on one or two occasions when the weather was dry.

"OUST" ROOSTER FROM CROP

Infertile eggs will keep much longer than fertile eggs and will stand up better for trade during warm weather, states R. L. Watkins, poultry extension specialist, Iowa State College, Ames, in advocating the disposal of all cockerels as soon as the breeding season is over and the market is favorable.

Candling tests have shown that fertile eggs will show deterioration in 12 hours or less, according to Mr. Watkins, and in the ordinary warm weather of summer, a fertile egg will become unfit for use within 36 hours after it is laid.

In addition, a rooster eats 15 to 20 times its own weight in grain or its equivalent each year, and for this reason alone, Mr. Watkins says, it is uneconomical to keep cockerels after the breeding season is over.

MITES, LICE THRIVE IN SUMMER

Summer is closely akin to Heaven for lice and mites in the poultry flock, if damage done by these parasites is any indication of the enjoyment that they get from life, asserts H. A. Bittenbender, head of the Poultry Husbandry Department, owa State College. These two pests arei n great abundance at all times, he says, but increase rapidly during summer, causing a great loss in vitality, reduced egg production and often death.

The cheapest, fastest and most effective warm weather method of controlling lice is to dip the birds in a solution of an ounce of pure sodium fluoride to a gallon of water. The feathers are ruffled and the bird is immersed so that the solution comes well up on the neck. The head is then dipped under quickly and the feathers are ruffled on the neck as the head is raised out of the solution. Growing birds, laying hens and chicks, if treated carefully, may be dipped safely on warm, dry days, according to Professor Bittenbender.

Mite control is somewhat more difficult because the mites stay on roosts and in dark corners during the day and inhabit the fowls only at night, at which time they gorge themselves with blood. Mites may be held in check, Mr. Bittenbender says, by repeated use of kerosene and crank case drippings, but the one drawback with this is that mites increase most rapidly during warm weather when field work is the greatest and when it is hardest to give the necessary spraying.

A more effective and cheaper method, considering the entire year, is to spray once a year with carbolineum or creosote, either alone or with crank case oil. One such spraying will obsolutely control these pests, Mr. Bittenbender says. These substances, sold by most druggists, dry slowly and no birds should be allowed to stay in the house until 4 to 7 days after spraying. This may necessitate spraying a third of the house at a time, leaving the roosts which are being treated outside to insure that no chickens roost in the sprayed section. A thoro cleaning should precede such a spraying, because the spray will be of little value if there are two or three inches of manure in the bottom of the house or on the dropping boards.

Before using the above sprays, it is advisable to grease the hands, arms and face and to handle the spray in the shade as much as possible to avoid burning one's hands.

WASHING WOODWORK

Use only pure, mild soap in washing soiled woodwork or furniture. Wipe dry immediately, or the moisture will soak up the paint and make it streaked or yellow. If the finish has a dull and dead look, after washing, go over it with an oil or furniture polish rub, or give it another coat of varnish.

SHORTCAKE

Make a biscuit dough, a little short and sweetened slightly. Roll it an inch thick and bake. When done, split it, butter and spread with jam, berries, oranges, or any prepared fruit. When you have covered the filling with the top half of the crust, cover the whole with whipped cream and drop more fruit into it.

Canned rhubarb juice is a fine addition to punch. If you have more of it than you need in season can the juice for this purpose. It also helps the flavor of pudding sauces, mince meat and may be mixed with other fruit juices to make jelly or jam. Some housewives open several cans of fruit and mingle the flavors in novelty jams.

A Better Living from Your Farm

TILE drainage gives larger yields from the same acreage, the same seed and the same amount of labor. It produces crops at a lower cost per bushel or ton.

Drain your wet lands and make more money from your farm—have more conveniences and comforts, give the children a better education and enjoy greater security and comfort in old age.

Tile This Fall

and your increased earnings next year will pay the cost a year quicker than if you waited until next spring.

Also it is easier to tile now. There is less water to bother the diggers. The soil is settled so it spades easier. The fields are firm so you can haul larger loads to the ditch.

"Every Splinter Has A Point"

Vol. 2 Thursday, May 26, 1927. No. 6

Published in the Interests of the People of Belmond and Vicinity by the GREENLANDER LUMBER COMPANY.

How's this for an ad? "Wanted—gentleman who can furnish one half dozen eggs to my one half pound of ham. Object, matrimony. Address, Mrs. J. S., Care this newspaper."

Creditor, trying to get a settlement—"All right, I'm ready to meet you half way. I'll forget half of the bill you owe me." Customer — "Fine. I'll meet you half way. You forget one half, and I'll forget the other half."

We hear a lot of talk about salesmanship. We have it practiced on us every day or two by some "high pressure" artist who says he can make a John Wanamaker out of us if we buy his goods. We don't like high pressure methods. We want you to buy our merchandise because you WANT it—not because we want you to have it.

We were told the other day about a certain small boy in this community who was attending Sunday school. The previous lesson had been about the Roman Centurian. Of course you know the story! When the teacher asked for volunteers to tell what last Sunday's lesson was about, this small boy raised his hand and says, "It was about the Roman Numeral!"

If you have a poor roof, you have a poor building. Use our Red Cedar Shingles—they last and last.

We're just about convanced that the happiest people are those who don't amount to much and don't give a darn.

Colored Doctor—"Yo' husban' ain't gwine t'git well, Mrs. Brown. But I'se knocked de fever out'n him an' you has de satisfaction of knowin' dat he died cured."

A million flies outside are better than one in the house. How about your screen?

"Part-Time" Men and Regular Jobs

The London Spectator estimates that Great Britain loses two billion dollars annually through inefficiency due to ill-health. On the whole, health is better in America, but with three times as great a population it is probable our loss is greater than Britain's.

Everywhere you will find "part-time" men; men who would like to work full time, but are physically unable. A great deal of this loss could be overcome if these men could be made to realize the importance of their spines as an influence of their health.

By my Chiropractic health method I correct diseases of the eyes, ears, nose, throat, lungs, heart, stomach, liver, kidneys, bowels and lower organs.

4-H MEETING

The G. G. G. Club of Meservey held their regular monthly business meeting at the Janssen home, ten members being present at the meeting. Before the meeting the girls roasted weiners and marshmallows. The meeting was then called to order by Harriet Sprau, president. A talk on "The Care of the Feet" was given by Wilma Pals. Phyllis Agler also gave us a good talk on the picture, "The Sistine Madonna" and "The Age of Innocence."

This meeting was a farewell for Hallie Ward, it being the last meeting she will be able to attend before she leaves for her home.

Dainty refreshments were served by the hostesses.

MORE ROBBERY

Three places here were again entered last Wednesday during the night. The pool hall was broken into thru the side entrance and several dollars in nickels were taken, besides a quantity of candy. The hardware store was relieved of about eighteen pocket knives, and the lumber office was entered thru a window which was pried open. At this place checks amounting to about $75 were taken. It seems strange that the two latter places should again be broken into and so closely following the previous time. The culprits are evidently in need of these particular articles and not able to work for a living.

News About Iowa People and Events

Buckeye trees are in bloom. They have been called the magnolia of the northland, but lacking in fragrance. The buckeye tree belongs to the chestnut family, but is not native to Iowa except in isolated cases. On Walnut creek, a few miles west of Des Moines, there is a thicket of them. The people of the south send magnolia buds through the mails by sticking a small potato on each stem. The moisture in the potato keeps the bud alive. Peonies may be sent the same way. Bouquets of cut flowers may be preserved much longer if small sections are cut off of the stems with a pair of scissors while under water. An aspirin tablet dropped in the water in the vase will restore life and freshness to the flowers.

Traffic problems in Des Moines have been growing in recent years because of the large use made by students at schools and colleges of automobiles in attendance upon the sessions. At Drake University some days there are as many as 500 automobiles parked in the streets and congestion results. An occasional parent refuses to grant the children the use of the automobile in attending school because of the tendency to joy ride during the noon and evening periods.

A dispatch from Washington the other day gave additional information touching the radio situation in Iowa. It stated that "another bombardment of letters in behalf of the farm stations" at Shenandoah, those of Henry Field and Earl May, fell on the radio commission. In the morning mail were 575 letters protesting against cutting their wave length. In all, nearly 5,500 letters have reached the commission. The commission will announce its ruling probably this week. Members of the commission intimated the 'farm stations' would be protected but it is expected restrictions will be imposed on direct advertising."

Iowa and Michigan have staged a twelve-month contest in milk production, and Iowa has won. The charitable and penal institutions of the two commonwealths were pitted against each other during 1926 in a friendly competition arranged by the boards of control, and the Hawkeye state came in ahead by showing a milk production of 10,161 pounds per cow on state farms, against a production of 10,081 for every bossy in the pastures of Wolverine institutions. The average milk production for Iowa cows outside institutions in 1926 was but 4,051 pounds, not half that of institutional herds; while the per cow production in Michigan was 3,918 pounds.

The Spirit of Fairness
THE greatest asset of any bank is its dependability and if any one quality more than any other assists a bank in establishing a reputation for dependability it is that of "fairness."
That is why this bank has exerted every effort to carry into its daily transaction with patrons a spirit of fairness---fairness to its depositors, fairness to its borrowers, and fairness to itself.
In the same spirit of fairness we should appreciate larger balances in those of our checking accounts that have been carried at a loss.

Chevrolet is the only car in its price class offering bodies by Fisher—built as only Fisher can build, and styled as low-priced cars were never styled before!
Bodies by Fisher are everywhere acknowledged to represent the highest order of beauty, luxury, and safety—and never was the superiority of Fisher craftsmanship more evident than in the Most Beautiful Chevrolet.
Despite the lowness of Chevrolet prices, there is not the slightest compromise in design, construction or finish. All embody exactly the principles employed on the highest priced cars—a composite construction of selected hardwood and steel. All are finished in beautiful colors of lustrous, lasting Duco.
Enhancing the beauty of the bodies themselves are numerous features of distinction previously considered exclusive to the costliest cars—features typified by heavy full-crown, one-piece fenders and bullet-type headlamps.
Only the economies of Chevrolet's great volume production make possible such quality at Chevrolet prices—value so outstanding that comparisons cease to exist. Ask for a demonstration!

SELF-FED SOWS GAIN BEST

The sows which are culled out and are to be sold after their pigs have been weaned may be most economically and rapidly fattened by using a self-feeder, according to experiments conducted at Iowa State College. These experiments also show that sows will frequently make economical and rapid gains on corn alone, but the feeding specialists believe that some protein supplement should be provided in the self-feeder.

The problem of feeding such sows, which are ordinarily yearlings or two-year-olds, is different from that of feeding growing pigs, A. L. Anderson of Iowa State College points out. The task with sows is not to get growth with condition, but to put the sows in marketable condition without increasing their size, inasmuch as the present day market demands light hogs.

In the feeding experiments, conducted at Ames under the direction of John M. Evvard, on sows weighing 261 pounds at the start of the experiment, the daily gains were better by a third of a pound from self-feeding than from hand feeding. The self-fed sows gained 2.64 pounds daily, while those hand-fed gained 2.30 pounds.

Old sows weighing from 300 to 500 pounds and just thru suckling litters will often make economical gains on corn alone, Mr. Evvard says. However, when self-feeding sows, a compartment should be provided for protein supplement as well as for corn, especially if the sows are sucked down very thin, or the pasture is not of the best.

For Camel was created to succeed in the hardest-to-please age ever known. It was made to satisfy those who demand the utmost, and modern smokers have given it such popularity as no other cigarette ever had.

If you're downright hard to please, just try Camels. new peaks of Speed, power and safety

What Hudson Did "Demonstration Week"

In addition to hundreds of new records for speed, power, acceleration, hill-climbing and inter-city reliability runs, during a nationwide "Demonstration Week", the Hudson Super-Six contributed these brilliant new marks in the local arena of motor supremacy:

From 5 to 25 miles an hour in 7 seconds.

All drivers remarked about wonderful action of Hudson's self-applying brakes, also how the car held the road on corners and curves.

THE STORY

"But how do I look," Mary asked bitterly, "taking your money and not owning you?"

"You'll get your chance one of these days. And it'll be a lot better. If the lovely Mrs. Johnston ever does take it into her head to smile on me, my stock will go way up with the villagers. They'll think I'm clever. But they'll think the woman's crazy."

He roared with laughter at the picture he had conjured up of the village worthies discussing the affair, and Mary followed his example.

"You'll have to take your arm away, when we get round this bend," she warned him. "But, oh, Father, I do love you."

"Do you? I'd lose everything I have, rather than one hair on your little head, Mary. And now, mind the plan we talked over and show me the kind of business head my girl has. Remember that you and I and Ned agreed that it's the rebels here and there that keep things from getting stale and into ruts, and we want them in our midst." He took his arm away. "I'm Dabbs the grocer now, but I'll be father all the way down home."

Mary's head was high as, accompanied by her father, she faced the entire community assembled in Mannheim's living room. As a matter of fact, the community had that moment been discussing the extraordinary Johnston engagement, in the light of "a social experiment."

One thing Mary was devoutly thankful for, and that was that Dorothy Selden had gone away. Mary felt that she could not have stood Dorothy's sneers at the grocer.

But now she was speaking, her father's eyes on her:

"I felt I should make this explanation myself, and not let it come through a lawyer. I—I am the Clover Hollow Realty company; that is, the majority shares in that company are now mine, and I want to have, as neighbors and tenants, live people—people who have views, decided views, even though they are not mine—people who will stimulate the community and set an example of honorable dealing, fairness, courage and cleverness to the whole countryside. So you can see why—I am pleased to have you—and want to retain you—as tenants.

"About Mr. Dabbs—" Mary turned in a simple, natural way and took Dabbs' hand, as though to present him to them, "I'm going to ask you to let bygones be bygones. I want to keep you both. Is it a bargain, tenants?"

Her smile won them instantly, and O'Toole with a muttered, "The darlint," led in gallantly holding out his hand to the "swatest landlord in the world."

They watched her go down the path and ride away beside her "agent," and Mrs. Mannheim had the last word.

"She may join with us now," she said a little sadly, "and she has all the earmarks of an enthusiastic worker, but what will happen after she marries Rangeley?"

They drew together to discuss that aspect.

Once out of sight, the agent became the father.

"Handled them like a born politician, Mary. I'm proud of you."

The landlord, seeing that the road was clear, hugged the agent.

On High Ridge road, where the wind swept across fields of young grain, and clover scented the air, Ned, who had been driving the silent Polly at breakneck speed, slowed down.

"It's a pity you don't really love me, Polly Johnston," he remarked, glancing at her, "for it seems to me we ought to cling together for protection. We are being cold-shouldered to a degree."

"Don't be silly, as well as disrespectful. Both Claude and Mary adore you. I am the odd number."

"Are you so sure about Mary adoring me?" he asked her.

Polly leaned toward him curiously. "Aren't you?" she asked.

Ned shook his head. He turned a face toward his prospective mother-in-law that was too honestly pained and puzzled to smile at or doubt.

"I'm in a frightful predicament, Polly. I'm mad about your daughter, and she—well, she's just engaged to me."

Polly Johnston so far forgot herself as to whistle softly.

"How long has this been going on?"

"Since the beginning. I took her then on any terms she was willing to make. Now, it hurts."

"Why did she engage herself at all?" Polly demanded, but more as though she was thinking aloud than asking a question, and a fairly unflattering question.

Ned did not answer. Polly glanced at him. Something in his face set her thinking. Presently she looked up and said, with the utmost sincerity, "If I understand you correctly, Ned, it's a pity."

"Yes, isn't it. You see, Polly, how your youthful mistake involves others."

"It wasn't entirely a mistake. Look at Mary."

"Have you said that to Claude?"

"No," admitted Polly. "You and Mary and Claude are all so clever, I thought I'd leave you to discover the fact yourselves."

Ned slowed down the machine and stopped it in a secluded spot on a deserted road.

"I just barely remember my own mother," he told Polly distantly, "and I think she must have had a rotten time with my father. But I don't believe she would act as you are acting toward Mary. I have a sneaking idea she would have stood for my marble-hearted father rather than have made it hard for me."

Polly Johnston burst into tears.

Ned stared, astonished, and then looked frightened. This was not in the least what he had expected. He put his arm about Polly, and she put her head on his shoulder and cried heartily. Ned patted her at intervals, a little distractedly.

"If this is doing you good, it's all right, but it's rather hard on me."

"I know it, Ned," Polly sniffed. "I'm finishing up as fast as I can and it has done me good."

"In that case," Ned was gallantry itself, "don't mind me."

Presently Polly dried her eyes, lifted her head and looked into Ned's kind eyes.

"Then you think," she said, as though continuing a conversation, "that it's because Mary is uncertain about what's to become of me that she can't decide about her own life, and if I made some definite plan for my own future, not too far removed from Peace Valley, Mary would be able to take her own happiness, and yours, into consideration."

"Any little compromise on your part would be acceptable. Say you settled down for a while in the White house so that Mary could see with her own eyes that you were not pining, and Claude could call upon you discreetly once in so often. It's your utterly detached attitude that's getting on Mary's nerves."

Then he gave her a quick, frank look as though reading her thoughts and said: "Always remembering, dear Polly, that I'm deeply interested."

Polly turned a determined face toward him. "Before we turn back, Ned, do you think you could bring yourself to call me 'mother'?"

Ned's hand slipped from the wheel. His arms went round her.

"I'd love to—Mother."

Polly sighed. "Do you think I'm utterly selfish about Mary?"

Ned did not remove his arms. He shook his head. "No, it's just—well in the ordinary course of events. If you'd stuck to your job of being Claude's wife there might have been four or five other upstanding little Dabbses, and you wouldn't be so concentrated on Mary, to the exclusion of everything else."

"Take your arms away. You are rather nasty to me, Ned."

"You wanted the truth. Have a cigarette and forget it."

Polly accepted the cigarette.

"Let me smoke this in peace and make up my mind, before we go back."

They sat, saying nothing, Ned's thoughts busy with his own future. The woman beside him was facing the long years to come, honestly, for the first time. She knew that her position was untenable. She knew also that Claude Dabbs asked only the privilege of watching over and caring for Mary, for Ned and for herself. He would ask nothing of her, grateful if she would stay near them for Mary's sake, grateful that the children loved him.

Polly's mind leaped to its fine conclusion. Here was her opportunity. It might even be that in Claude she would find the friend and companion she had missed and longed for, since Mary had gone her own way. Did not Claude face middle age, too, but with philosophy, and brushing aside its disillusions, neither grudged youth its due nor shrank from life. Claude was alive, very much so, but of life he expected little; of himself, much. Polly wondered if she would ever grasp life as serenely and as firmly as he did, taking what it gave, grudging nothing that it withheld.

In the library at Claude's home, Claude and Mary were turning over plans for the new factory and the proposed public library and recreation room.

"Mother and Ned take a long time on that drive," Mary observed, finally. "Oh, Dad! do you think anything's happened?"

"Not a bit of it," Claude told her tranquilly. "They've just gone a bit further than they intended. Why, daughter, what's wrong?" Mary had clutched his arm.

"Nothing, only I get so worried nowadays. I never used to. But Ned's a little reckless, don't you think?"

"No," Claude rose to Ned's defense sturdily. "Ned's a splendid driver." Then he laughed. "Is it Ned, or your mother, who's so precious that you think the Almighty may be jealous?"

"Oh hush, Father, don't say it," Mary implored, and then laughed at herself, helplessly. "See how primitive I'm growing, like the heathen who give ugly names to their best-beloved to shield them from the wrath of the gods."

"It's queer," Claude began, more to himself than his daughter, "but the old folk were so often right. My mother used to say that love made women savage and men gentle. I wonder."

"There they are!" Mary ran to the doorway leading to the garden. She stopped astonished. "Father, something must have happened. Mother's getting out."

Claude looked over her shoulder. "Let me past, Mary. If Polly's coming into my store, I must be there to wait on her."

Mary watched him go, but stood waiting. She felt a little sad and alone. Ned came into the room from the hall behind her.

"Ned," Mary said as she turned, "has anything happened?"

"Something nice. Mother's coming in."

"Mother!" Mary echoed, her lips parted to ask a question.

"And before she gets here," Ned told her hurriedly, coming very close, "I want to give you your freedom. I think what you wanted is coming about. Mother's going to be reasonable and settle down for awhile here, and you're free to do as you like about—about that engagement of yours, Mary."

He paused, and as she remained silent, continued, slowly: "I can't go on this way. I want you to know that, and to know that I'll keep on working with Claude, no matter what happens. You see, I simply can't stick this, Mary. I'm just an ordinary able-bodied man, who wants to be married soon, and expects to be loved, not just tolerated and dodged and held off. The woman I marry will simply have to want me as much, and as near, as I want her."

Mary looked at him, her eyes on that mouth that was so like Loren Rangeley's now, so hard, so straight, so determined. She had certainly not meant to do it, but there seemed to be just one shameless thing to do. At the touch of her hand on his arm, Ned turned to her, and Mary pulled his head down and kissed him, knowing that after that she would never escape from any engagement he made. Ned held her tightly, his eager lips against her own, then hot against her pulsing throat.

Claude and Polly could be heard in the hall, coming toward them. Ned put

"Oh, Mary," He Whispered, "How Could You Torture Me So Long?"

Mary on her feet, but she clung to him still, dizzy and speechless. He put his arm about her.

"Oh Mary," he whispered. "How could you torture me so long?"

"I didn't—know. But I'll make it up to you, Ned. I'll marry you—"

"Tonight," Ned told her.

Polly Johnston, a little pale from the effort, came toward the library door. Her eyes changed as she saw Claude's own room, and read from it deeper into Claude's self. She blamed Mary that she had not been told this side of the man, forgetting how she had refused to listen. She was surprised now that Mary did not move toward her.

"Mary," she began, "I'm going to be good and stay—"

"Mary!" Claude had seen his girl's face and moved toward her.

"Mother—Father!" Ned's voice stopped them both. "Mary and I ride to town tonight—to be married. We think that will make it easier all round. You see, Mother's friends would embarrass Father's. And as for my respected parent—well, it would be awkward all round. You can have any sort of a big time you like when we come back, but now we want no fuss, and nobody but each other."

"Sensible idea," Claude admitted, to give Polly time. "Got the license?"

Ned nodded. "Got it this morning." He smiled down into the blue eyes set in the white face against his shoulder. "Mary, you tell them it's all right."

"Yes, Father—Mother, you'll understand and let me go with Ned?"

Polly Johnston stepped forward and folded her darling in her arms. "Of course, dear," she murmured. "Your bag's in Ned's car. I packed it, at the house, while Ned waited."

Mary's eyes were as wide as Claude's.

"You must have been very sure," and Mary looked at Ned, and blushed.

"I was," Polly Johnston said, and kissed her daughter, released her and stood back watching her run to her father to be held close in his arms.

"That's to be my lot now," she told herself, "to stand back and watch." But evidently it was not to be so yet, for two strong young arms were about her and Ned's voice whispered in her ear: "You beautiful old darling, I'll never forget this!"

They were going, and at the last Polly had her reward, for as her girl went down the steps, radiant, she suddenly turned and left her lover to run to her mother.

"Oh, Mother! I can't bear you to stay alone in that big empty White house. Promise me to telephone to—"

"Mother, behind the grocery store!"

Mary gave them both such a rapturous look of pure content that Claude, meeting Polly's smile, laughed aloud and warned Ned to drive off or he would have to take along with him both father and mother.

They were gone. Polly followed Claude into the dim and shadowy library. As his hand groped for the matches, she caught and held it. Through the dusk Claude could see her eyes, gleaming with mischief, as she went back twenty years and asked for the shibboleth:

"Wait, Claude. This house of yours—is it lit by 'alabaster lamps'?"

Claude turned on her swiftly. In twenty years he had learned his lesson.

"No, but it will be—if you stay."

LARGEST FINE EVER PAID IN WRIGHT COUNTY IS COLLECTED

Goldfield Banker Pays County $5,000

McElhinney, Cited To Explain Why He Had Not Paid, Hands Over Money

DOWS MAN IS SENTENCED

The largest fine ever paid in Wright county was turned into the office of County Clerk R. V. Goslin last Friday when B. W. McElhinney Goldfield banker convicted of a charge of fradulent banking, paid the $5,000 fine that was assessed against him May 6, and with it $472.15 as court costs of the suit. McElhinney had been cited to appear Friday for questioning as to his reasons for failure to pay his fine. He did not appear in the court room, but remained in his car in the court yard, while his attorney, Harry Mitchell, arranged the details of payment. Thus any further inquisition was unnecessary.

Two other indictments which were found against McElhinney by the February grand jury have been dismissed.

It would have been within the rights of the presiding judge to change the penalty if the defendant had not paid his fine and had not made satisfactory response to the questioning which would have followed. This could only have been done on the motion of the judge, however. It was not within the rights of the county attorney to ask for a change of the order of judgment, and it could only have been done within the term time of the term in which the penalty was originally ordered.

Dewey LaRue, charged with breaking and entering at the Sam Ferguson meat market in Dows, May 23, pleaded guilty to the charge and was committed to the county jail for a term of one year. At the same time a parole from a jail sentence for chicken theft was withdrawn. LaRue had served two months of a nine months sentence on that charge. Now he will have to serve the other seven months on the chicken thief charge with the twelve months for the meat market job, serving the two sentences concurrently. Inasmuch as he has a confirmed record of lawlessness it is not at all likely that he will be permitted any parole on the combined sentences.

Investigation of the case of Roy Rowe, held for some time in the local jail for contempt of court in failure to pay alimony, disclosed that he has been stricken with epilepsy within the last year and is unable to make any considerable amount of money. When he was divorced he left his wife with six small children whom she was struggling to support. For two years after the decree and the award of alimony was issued, Rowe worked at Mason City making $85 to $125 a month, yet never turned any of it over to his family. Since he has been in jail here he has suffered several epileptic fits. The oldest child is now thirteen years of age and is living with relatives, while the mother is working hard to support the remainder of the family and hold them together.

American Credit Corporation was denied recovery of a Ford coupe which was confiscated when Leo Donovan was found driving it with liquor as a cargo. Judge Clock decreed that proceed of sale of the liquor car should be devoted first to expense of keeping it since it was taken, then to court costs, and that the balance should be turned over to the treasurer for the benefit of the school fund.

Two cases against Howard Kenner Francis were dismissed since he has already served a term in the reformatory.

J. D. Longworth was denied garnishment against Farmers Mutual Hail Insurance Association for an account of Earl Walrod because the earnings of Walrod were exempt.

Judge Clock recessed court Saturday evening and will be back next Saturday. He will be engaged two weeks longer on the case involving removal from office of supervisors in Henry county, over which he has been presiding for some time.—Monitor.

HOWARD WOLLE WRITES OF TRIP TO CEYLON

(Editor's Note—Howard Wolle, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Wolle, of Belmond, who is Operating Engineer with the Bombay Telephone Co., Ltd., of Bombay, India, writes in part as follows of a recent trip to Ceylon.)

Bombay, India, May 5, 1927

The weather here is very trying now, and of course under my present condition I am going carefully. We are now having our worst weather in Bombay, and the heat, humidity and other minor things are very trying for a person even in the best of health.

Have now resumed duty, or rather half duty, working in the morning and part of the afternoon, until I get back to my old self again. Seems mighty good to get back on the job after being away four months. The time was long in some ways during my illness, but from what I understand I am lucky to be at work again. They tell me I was very ill, part of the time they had no hope of my getting well again. The doctors and nurses were very good to me, and I had the best of attention. The trouble seemed to start with a run of enteric fever, turning into pneumonia and then followed up by an abscess. They were going to operate on me, but the abscess broke, and after coughing up over a quart and a half of blood and pus I began to improve. After being out of the hospital three weeks, I had another attack and spent twelve more days in the hospital. They decided to send me to Ceylon where they hoped I would regain my health. I sailed April 1 for Ceylon, the trip taking three days.

Ceylon is one of the prettiest and nicest places I have ever been. Everything was green, whereas in Bombay all is burnt brown from the terrific heat and lack of water. I spent most of my time in Ceylon in the hills, some 6,000 feet above sea level, where I was compelled to sleep under blankets at night. In fact, several nights we had frost. Ceylon is only 7 degrees north of the equator but is not as hot as India because of the sea breezes from all sides. I was only 150 miles from Colombo, but it took us 10 hours to make the trip for it is a great engineering feat, this railroad, running up and winding around the mountains, and travel is slow. The sights and views from the train were beautiful, tea plantations, rubber plantations and fields of paddy or rice.

There being plenty of game in the jungles, it was my hope to see some wild elephants, which I did through field glasses. In some places the elephants are often used to drive out the smaller game, tigers, panthers, etc.

I arrived in Bombay again April 29 and resumed duty May 2—the first day I had worked since December 20.

Best wishes to all the folks in Belmond.

HOWARD R. WOLLE.

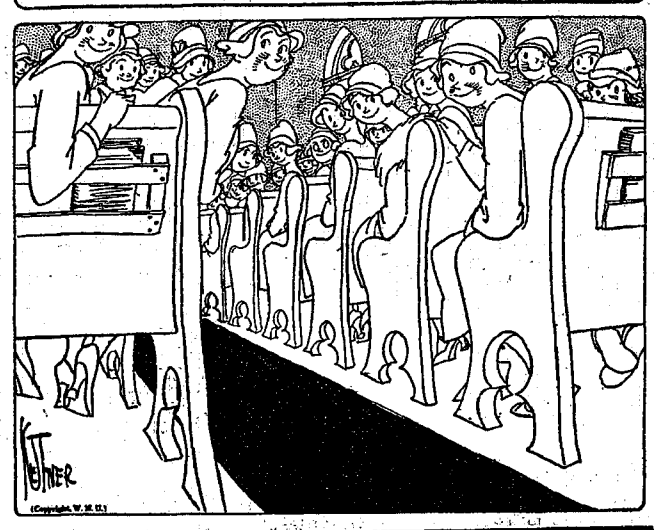
A DOUBLE SURPRISE

It isn't very often anyone has two surprise parties given them in one day, but such was the case with Mrs. F. E. Snyder last Friday, May 27, which was her birthday. Two groups of her friends each unknown to the other made up surprise parties on her. Mrs. Bergsma, Mrs. Snyder's aunt from Huron, S. D., was in one of the parties, Mrs. Snyder having no knowledge of her coming. Many nice gifts and tokens were received by Mrs. Snyder and a very happy afternoon was spent.

Here Comes the Bride



Red Cross Nurse Gives Health Hints

Miss Giesman Tells How To Keep Healthy In Summer

Vacation time! Scores of happy children gleefully waving promotion cards and hurrying home in inform their proud parents. And then in sad contrast, walking alone, eyes misty, spirits depressed, pictures of despondency, are those who somehow just "didn't get along" in their lessons. Can you hark back to the days when you were in school? Can you imagine yourself a child without a promotion slip? Can you recall the disappointment, the chagrin which wells up as the "failure" watches the other children give vent to all the joy and happiness of success?

Years ago we thought the boy who failed at school was "just plain dumb." He wasn't bright like other children. We never thought of looking for a reason. And the only remedial measure taken was some kind of a reprimand for the child. But today we know that the FAILURE is not "just plain dumb." Medical science has proved beyond a doubt that a large majority of failures at school are directly caused by physical handicaps for which the child is in no way responsible.

Children who have deaf ears, impaired vision, diseased tonsils, adenoids, undernourished bodies or fatigued nervous systems, cannot possibly do the work of normal, healthy children. A child does not have to be completely deaf, or to have such defective eyes that he cannot read for these defects to play their disastrous part in his scholastic downfall. Even with slight impairment, his constant straining to hear what is said, his terrible embarrassment when he can't understand questions asked him, his fatiguing efforts to see what is written on the board, all lead to mental confusion, a depressed feeling of inferiority, discouragement and loss of interest, which make success all but impossible. In our own school this year the nurse found children who had physical defects of sufficient magnitude to retard their normal, physical and mental development—to check their energy and to curb their initiative. Every parent of every child inspected, suffering from physical defects has been so informed by the nurse. Many of these defects have already been corrected.

But there are scores of parents who have not yet done this—not because they do not care, nor because they are not anxious to do everything possible to give their child the best that this day affords, but mainly because they have been delaying this from time to time.

Summer is here, when the child has three months in which to do nothing but grow, accumulate strength, store up energy and get himself in the best possible condition for the next school term. Now is the time for parents who have been delaying, to have these defects corrected—to prepare to send the child back to school next September mentally and physically alert, and ready to take his proper place in both work and play.

Procrastination, the great American game of "putting off," is one of the chief causes for an annual waste of $175,000,000 in our educational system. This is what it costs tax payers each year who support city and county schools to educate children who have to repeat grades. Experts tell us that most of these "failures are due to correctible defects. Although this is a terrible waste of money, it is not the only deplorable effect of this procrastination. Parents who delay the correction of defects in their children and dismiss the suggestion with a laugh at these "new-fangled" notions, are placing a penalty on the children for their indifference which may prove disastrous.

Take your children to your family physician, get his advice and follow it. You can leave your children no greater heritage than a sound body and clear mind.

The old saying, "it is better to be safe than sorry," is truer regards health than we realize.

Memorial Day Is Observed

American Legion Carries Thru Program As Arranged

Memorial Day was observed in Belmond Monday, as arranged in the program planned by the American Legion. Following a few selections by the band in the morning, the parade formed and marched to the city park where the address of the day was given by Attorney Butler, of Mason City. Mr. Butler's address was excellent and timely, and was universally commented upon. Following the exercises at the park, the parade marched to the cemetery and further exercises were conducted there. A noticeable feature of the day's observation was that only two of the civil war veterans of Belmond were left to be present, C. A. Church and J. P. Byers, out of the once strong and thriving G A. R. post of Belmond. Ceremonies for the day were concluded by raising the flag to full mast upon the return from the cemetery.

ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION

Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Kragh were pleasantly surprised by their relatives on Decoration Day in honor of their 10th wedding anniversary. A bountiful dinner was served on the Bailey porch after which Mr. and Mrs. Kragh were reunited in marriage. C. A. Dow officiated. Mrs. Floyd Bailey acted as bridesmaid, Lowell Schwinger as best man, Gwendolin Dow and Keith Bailey as flower girl and ring bearer, respectively, and Kenneth Bailey and Bobbie Dow as train bearers. F. E. Snyder gave the bride away. After the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Kragh were presented with gifts appropriate to the occasion. A jolly afternoon was concluded by taking pictures of the bridal party and others on the lawn. Out of town guests were Mrs. A. L. Bergsma of Huron, S. D. Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Dow and family from Boone, and Mr. and Mrs. Lowell Schwinger of Ackley..

Miss Mildred Veeder left for Fargo, N. D., to attend the conference of the United Chautauqua Co. She will receive her route for the summer while at the conference.

TWENTY-THREE SENIORS GRADUATE FROM BELMOND SCHOOL TODAY

MRS. J. H. FETROW

Ida F. Fetrow, nee Shoop, second daughter of Samuel and Mary Shoop, was born in Dauplin county, Pa., March 19, 1871, and died in the University hospital, Iowa City, Iowa, May 26, 1927, aged 56 years two months and seven days.

Ida came west with her father's family in the early 80's, locating near Ida Grove. She grew to young womanhood on her father's farm, assisting and caring for the family needs in those early pioneer days.

On October 25, 1887, Miss Shoop was united in marriage to J. H. Fetrow, which union was blessed with two children, Ben H. and Albert L. Fetrow, both of Belmond.

Surviving are the following: two sisters, Mrs. Mary Boyer, of Arthur Iowa, Mrs. W. L. Quilan of Ashland, S. D., two brothers, William of Castana, Iowa, and Simeon of Scranton, Pa., two sons, referred to above, her husband, and five grandchildren, all of Belmond, and a host of friends and acquaintances.

Mrs. Fetrow was a member of the Rebekah lodge for many years, and a faithful attendant. Sister Fetrow was a truly good mother, faithful, dutiful wife, and a highly respected citizen.

She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal church for many years, as well as of the various organizations of the church. She displayed a great deal of interest in the church. The Kingdom and its claims upon life was a major consideration with her. Loyal to the church and its program to the very end, two weeks ago the day of her funeral she occupied her accustomed place in worship. Alas, that seat is vacant. She will be sorely missed in her home and place of business, where a great number received a pleasant and cordial greeting, but also in her class and other departments of church work with which she was related. She was a character that was always willing to do even more than her full share with any organization she affiliated.

Sister Fetrow is the first to break the family circle. We command the family to our Heavenly Father's care, who knows our needs and cares for same.

Funeral services were held Sunday afternoon, May 29, at the Methodist church, Rev. Snyder officiating, and interment was in Franklin Grove cemetery.

OBITUARY

Cornelius Esk, the oldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Eberhard Esk, was born on the 7th of December, 1903 at Hayfield, Iowa. At the age of ten years he came with his parents to Wright county and lived in this vicinity unto the day of his departure.

He quietly passed away after a short illness of about six days, Monday, the 23rd of May, at the age of twenty-three years, five months and sixteen days. The cause of his death was pneumonia.

Cornelius was of a quiet and loving disposition, loved and respected by a large circle of friends. He will not only be greatly missed at home but also at Sunday School and services on the Lord's day. We have reasons to be thankful because we do not need to mourn as those who have no hope. He leaves to mourn his untimely death his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Eberhard Esk, three brothers, his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Luke Wessels, of Meservey, and a host of other relatives and friends.

Funeral services were held Thursday, May 26 at the Emmanuel Reformed church, conducted by the Reverends H. Pannkuk and O. G. Poppen. The church was filled by a large number of friends who came to pay their last respects to the departed one. Interment was made on the family lot adjoining the church. May he rest in peace.

Card of Thanks

To all our friends and neighbors we wish to extend our sincere thanks for all kindness shown us during the sickness and death of our son and brother.

Mr. and Mrs. Eberhard Esk and Family.

Editorials

Third-term advocates of Coolidge's nomination are using every means of minimizing the established precedent against a third term. They are taking great pains to proclaim that this is the only reason his opponents can muster against him. If there were no other reasons than this—and others can easily be found—it is enough. Since Washington refused a third term in the presidential chair, establishing a rule which has never been broken, the country has taken it for granted that the unwritten law has become a fact. The few efforts made to break it have resulted in failure. Theodore Roosevelt could not overcome it, and if Roosevelt, with the tremendous public popularity which was his, failed, Coolidge will have a slim chance of overriding the third term hurdle. Whether or not Washington declined a third term thru belief that it was a bad thing for the country, the idea of eight years being the limit is a sound one. Suppose Coolidge does secure the election next year, what is to stop him from being a candidate again? If there is no just cause for the two-term precedent, then where would there be any for three terms, or four? If the eight-year rule is broken, where will we stop, twelve years, sixteen years, or more? After a man and a party have been in power eight years, the machine has been built up and government is more or less in the hands of one man, the man with the patronage, the president; or, at best, in the hands of a small group. Give them four more years in which to consolidate and entrench themselves and their machine, and we have gotten away from a republic and into a monarchy. One of the best things about this government of ours is that we have limited the time in power of any one man. And no other ruler in the world has the power that is invested in the president of the United States. There is no real reason why Coolidge should stay in the presidential chair another term. There is every reason why he should not. America has indeed come to a terrible pass in its history if there is but one man in our hundred and twenty millions population who is capable of heading our government. If such is true, it is the first time, for we have always found men, big men, capable men, men far more capable than Calvin Coolidge, to head our country. And we have better men today, Lowden, Dawes, Reed, Longworth, McAdoo, Walsh, and others who are better qualified than Coolidge. The third term precedent is enough to bar Coolidge from the presidency again without pointing out his dismal failures in statesmanship agricultural relief, sectional discrimination, and utter lack of vision. The big boys in the East will find that out if they attempt, as it now seems they will, to jam Coolidge down the throats of the voters for another four years. As a governor of Vermont, beyond whose borders all is blank in his sight, Coolidge would make a good executive; as president of the United States, aside from his economy program, he is mostly a total loss.

THIS, TOO, WILL PASS

Reinbeck Courier: Eight years ago, you could have found a hundred men on the streets of Reinbeck, who would solemnly assure you (and back their opinion with money) that land in Iowa would never again sell for less than $250 an acre, that hogs would never go below $12 a hundred and that corn would never again sell for less than $1 a bushel. It was in the air, almost a disease germ that infected everyone. Every man you saw was a booster for Iowa and its future.

That period passed. We can now look back and smile at our childlike faith in things as they were and in their never-changing. We can see that we were over-stimulated, that our prices were inflated. Not inflated as much as they have since been deflated, but still inflated too much.

Today you can find a hundred men on the streets of Reinbeck who will solemnly assure you (without backing any opinion with any amount of money) that corn is never going to be worth $1 a busnel again, that Iowa land can never pay interest on more than $100 an acre and that a man is foolish to buy land at more than that price with a little added, if the improvements on a farm are of exceptional value.

This, too, will pass. In a few years we will again look back and marvel at the frame of mind we are in right now. We will be astonished that we could ever have been so foolish as to say and think the things about our own property and our own community that we are saying and thinking right now.

The pendulum always swings as far one way as it previously swung the other. Reaction always equals the action. In business and economics as well as in mechanics and physics.

We are as far depressed now as we were exhilirated a few years ago and with worse results to ourselves, since while inflation resulted in ruin for a few, it gave them at least a grand and glorious feeling while our present attitude results not only in hardships for a few who were caught in the machine but in hardships for everyone in the country.

We do not know how far political measures can help us. We know that political measures helped railroads and industries and still helps them. But it is the height of foolishness to ignore the possibilities that lie in that direction and equally foolish to charge all our misfortunes to the few political leaders who have simply voiced the thoughts of practically all of us.

But politics aside, there is one thing that will help us and one indication that will show when we are on the upward road. That is a return of confidence in ourselves and in our businesses and properties. So long as any man who buys property in this section is immediately assailed by his friends as foolish for having bought, so long as the purchaser of any piece of land is told that if he had waited a few months he could have bought it cheaper, so long as men who were considered leaders of business opinion before their opinions were shown to be very low grade will continue to look ahead for the "bottom of the market" this country cannot regain prosperity.

We have the solution to a great part of all our economic troubles in our own hands and that solution is simply to believe in our own stuff No man can sell anything he doesn't believe in himself. We have been trying to do that and have failed to do so. Get confidence back on its feet and this present frame of mind will soon pass.

Eagle Grove Eagle: The discovery that a first grade plasterboard can be made from corn stalks should aid materially in retrieving the farmer from unprofitable corn raising. Just to what extent plasterboard will be used and afford a market is yet problematic, but it is growing in favor and will undoubtedly become a real factor. Rayon can also be produced from cornstalks successfully, which will furnish an almost unlimited market. Rayon is now made from wood and cotton, but can be made of equal quality from cornstalks alone. The effort made to encourage a large use of corn sugar seems to have been a failure. Even the farmers so vitally interested, would not use it. Had they persisted a little they would have found it a very satisfactory table sweetener. While it is only three-fourths as sweet as cane or beet sugar, bulk for bulk, it is also only three-fourths as heavy bulk for bulk. It can be used considerably more freely, costing no more, and giving the same sweetening. It is really preferable in seasoning sauces, breakfast foods, puddings, etc., than cane or beet sugar. A greater bulk has to be used, but no more weight. Corn sugar should be upon every table, and thus become a vital factor in the reduction of the much "deplored" corn surplus. There should be no waiting for government or providence for "surplus" relief. The farmers can do much themselves, and should do what they can while working the government for what they can.

OWNING YOUR HOME

Half the people in North America own their homes, that is, they have the family domicile in their own names, taking no account of the mortgage on the roof. A large proportion of them are still paying for their homes, but that is no disgrace. It encourages thrift, makes the family more stable, gives them an estate, makes them better citizens with a "stake" in community welfare and government.

Many more families might own their homes, if they only thought so, if they looked the proposition squarely in the face and were willing to make some sacrifices. Families often fail to give consideration to the idea of buying a home, because they jump at one conclusion that it would be impossible, or they desire to live in a home beyond their means. Even if one cannot buy at once the type of a home he wishes for life, it is wise to make a beginning and later that home may be sold and the price applied on another and more desirable home, the family having the advantage of a steady abiding place and the unearned increment through a few years.

"The gods provide thread for the web begun," says the adage, but one cannot place too much trust in anything but his own resources. In determining whether to buy a home one should consider the bargains to be obtained, whether the propertly will increase in vaue, what is the regular income of the family earners, what expenses as college or operations face one in the near future, what would happen if sickness or loss of the present position occurred, and how much the family can afford to pay each year for a home.

One can estimate that the rent money is applied on the purchase of the new home, but there will be taxes, insurance and upkeep. But the buying of a home will usually make the family willing to cut other expenses, and there are many ways in which funds can be coralled.

Perhaps one may rent a cheaper place until the family can save enough to make the first payment and move into the new home, or a roomer may be taken in and room rent applied on the purchase of the home, or the old auto may be made to serve a year longer. A family can cut many corners, in clothes, automobiles, and other running expenses, for the sake of the dear joy of owning a home.

QUICK QUILTING

A practical quilt for common use may be made of pretty calico, all of one pattern, except the borders, which are of darker color, to match the figure in the calico. The dark border saves the quilt from showing the soil about the edges.

Stretch the quilt on quilting frames; spread the cotton batting in a thin, even layer; cover with the top cover of the quilt, and pin all securely in place with rows of pins. With a yard stick, mark a checked pattern for quilting, diagonally across the quilt, in diamond shape, with lines about an inch apart; remove from the quilting frame.

To stitch the quilt on the sewing machine, lengthen the stitch to the utmost and be sure that the tension is not too tight. Stitch several lines, wide apart, in your design, first in one direction then in the other. Then fill in between these lines according to your pattern.

To protect the quilt, make a twelve inch strip, like the border, and baste it across the top and bottom ends, letting it lap over each side of the quilt six inches. This may be removed for washing more often than it is necessary to wash the whole quilt.

SALAD DRESSING—WITH VARIATIONS

One part vinegar to three parts olive oil, with salt and pepper to taste is the foundation of most salad dressings. Any number of other things may be added to vary the flavor, color and consistency. Powdered or prepared mustard adds a delightful tang. Powdered orgranulated sugar are desired by some, especially if the dressing is to be served with fruits. Sometime leave out the mustard and add some currant or other jelly.

Beat up an egg as abeginning and add the olive oil and vinegar, with a pinch of curry powder. Anchovy paste, chives, mustard, egg, oil and vinegar is another combination. Chopped water cress or chili sauce or both may be added to the fundamental dressing.

Cream Salad Dressing is made as follows: Mix a quarter teaspoon salt, half table-spoon each of sugar and mustard, a beaten egg and a cup of cream, and cook in a double boiler. When it begins to thicken add two tablespoons of butter and a quarter cup of vinegar. Add the vinegar very slowly, stirring constantly until entirely thick.

WASHING WHITE SILK

White silk is likely to turn yellow in the washing. To avoid this, use only the purest white soap, with no resin in it. Use warm water, not hot, and rinse the soap out thoroughly in warm water. Dry in a dark place. When the garment is half dry, roll it in a thick towel for a half hour and iron with a warm, not hot, iron.

FREE AIR

We understand there is talk of another jewelry store in town, specializing in watches and razors.

* * * *

Seems a high-pressure salesman drifted in last week and loaded up some of our prominent citizens with the stock.

* * * *

He must have been a real artist in the selling game, because he put his message across to graduates, they tell us, of Iowa U, Ames, Yale, and other notable institutions of learning.

* * * *

Despite the fact that he told 'em the merchandise wasn't worth a dime—a thin dime—they paid him five buck for the watches and two for the razors. Just a case of where the truth didn't do anyone any good but the teller.

* * * *

If some common, everyday, average mortal such as us had donated so generously to some poor devil who couldn't afford anything but a Willys-Knight car, we would have been investigated, brought before the insane commission and asked to show cause why we shouldn't be tied up to keep us from following some farmer's wagon out of town.

* * * *

Old man Barnum sure spouted a mouthful, as the boys say, when he said there was one born every minute. Only he didn't live long enough to see it become twins.

* * * *

Some campaign of education should be started among the college graduates of this community to teach them the value and safety of trading at home.

* * * *

And the danger of pokin' their nose into the other fellow's business. Only they didn't poke their nose in, they put their whole head into the lion's mouth.

* * * *

And the lion closed it.

* * * *

Like the famous verse:
There was a young lady from Niger,
Who went for a ride on a tiger;
They returned from the ride
With the lady inside,
And a smile on the face of the tiger.

* * * *

RAH! RAH! SISS!
BOOM! BAH!

* * * *

We ain't mentionin' no names, but we'll bet the price of candy, legal advice and pullin' teeth goes up.

* * * *

That's all right, fellows; we bought a necktie from a pretty girl once. That was before we were married, however.

* * * *

Notice Herman Schultz says last week that the only way to get your picture in the paper is to pay for it. That's one way, anyway, and we've got lots of room for more pictures. We'd like to see a regular photo gallery of our esteemed business men represented in this Great Family Almanac.

* * * *

Since Herman has started, none of you need hold back. If you haven't got a picture, we'll pay for having one taken. Martin Thoe has made us a special cut rate on such photos.

AGRICULTURAL NEWS NOTES

Seven of the most important projects claiming the attention of Iowa farmers during 1927 will be demonstrated by the farmers themselves as a special feature of the Agricultural Exposition at the coming Iowa State Fair, August 24 to September 2, under an arrangement made by the fair management this week, in cooperation with the Iowa Farm Bureau Federation.

The seven county Farm Bureaus which have made the most outstanding achievements in project work have been selected by the State Farm Bureau to conduct these exhibits and demonstrations at the fair this summer. The counties which will put on this work and the subjects which will be taken up in their exhibits were announced today as follows:

Swine Management—Cerro Gordo county.

Soybeans—Tama county.

Sweet Clover—W. Pottawattamie.

Soil Erosion—VanBuren county.

Soil Management—Polk county.

Co-operative Marketing—Palo Alto county.

A County Club Program—Dallas county.

These features will be in addition to the County Grain and Products Exhibits and the Individual Farm Exhibits which will also be special attractions in the Agricultural section of the 1927 State Fair. Secretary Corey, in outlining plans for the exposition today, predicted that it would be the biggest farm fair witnessed in Iowa in many years.

SOME PAMPER PASTURE GRASS

Ordinarily, bluegrass pasture are over-pastured in Iowa, but too light pasturing is also detrimental to pasture growth because it causes the crowns to thin and allows weeds to come in.

This statement is made by the Farm Crops Department, Iowa State College. The North Dakota Experiment Station in cooperation with the United States Department of Agriculture, found that when only 51 per cent of the forage was removed from the land by pasturing, weeds increased and the grass became coarse and thin.

The dead vegetation left on the grass did not help the next year's crop, either, as might be supposed. The proper amount of forage to remove, these tests showed, was about 74 percent. This gave the best pasture and maintained the pastures best from year to year. On tests where as much as 93 and 98 percent of the vegetation was removed, pastures fell off in production each successive year.

SILAGE BOOSTS SUMMER PROFIT

"Silage or grain must supplement the summer pasture if the dairy herd is to return the greatest amount of net earnings to its owner," says Earl Weaver, head of the Dairy Husbandry Department, Iowa State College, Ames. "The tendency to neglect cows when they are turned on pasture, even for a few days, allows them to get down in flesh and to drop in production."

During the summer of 1923, 34 cows were used in a 40 day trial at the Iowa State College dairy farm to determine the value of summer silage. In these tests, in which the grain feed was held constant, milk production increased 9 percent and the financial returns 7:43 percent.

These tests also showed that body weight fell when no silage was fed, but that this was regained when silage was again fed. Trials conducted again in 1924 showed similar results, and also that cows do not lose their appetite for silage in winter because of eating it in the summer.

HORSES ARE IN STRONG DEMAND

An officer of the Wisconsin Manufacturers' Association has written to Dean C. F. Curtiss, Ames, Iowa, as follows:

"We have a peculiar horse situation in Wisconsin. We will probably import this year into this state $2,000,000 worth of horses—perhaps more. We have been getting a lot of horses from Illinois and Iowa. The buyers maintain that there are no more to be had in Illinois and Iowa and have been buying now from Minnesota. It is now pretty well picked over. We have gotten in a few from the Dakotas and apparently they have no surplus. They are drifting now into Montana and probably by next year will be as far as Wyoming."

This is a critical situation and it is an indication of what is coming in every state in the near future if the horse breeding industry is not revived, declares Dean Curtiss. "There is no more important and profitable branch of agriculture than the raising of good draft horses," says the dean. "To neglect to do so will mean the imperative substitution of mechanical power for horse power, and a more serious situation with reference to the surplus of farm grain products."

GIVE ASPARAGUS BED A REST

While it is too late to plant asparagus seed, it is a good time, according to C. V. Holsinger, extension specialist, Iowa State College, to observe the growth made by Martha Washington asparagus in beds which are already established. This, he says, is the best variety for Iowa.

Cutting on asparagus beds should stop some time between the first and tenth of June, Mr. Holsinger says, especially if the bed is young. After cutting has stopped, the asparagus should be given clean cultivation until the end of the summer. A dressing of poultry or well rotted barnyard manure will stimulate crown growth and increase the crop prospects for next year.

FEED BROILERS— SELL ROOSTERS

At present there is a fairly large surplus of mediocre quality frozen poultry in storage, according to Roy L. Watkins, poultry extension specialist, Iowa tate College, Ames. This surplus, he says, tends to depress the broiler market and is one of the main reasons for the lower prices that are being paid for broilers this spring.

Until the last year or two the market demanded one and a half to two pound broilers, but the demand has now turned more to two and a half to three pound broilers for fur portions, instead of the two portions served from the lighter bird.

While it requires more feed to produce the second pound or pound and a half gain, Mr. Watkins says, it would no doubt be advisable to grow the cockerels out to heavier weights this year before marketing. In fact, with the exception of Leghorns, it will very likely pay to keep cockerels until they reach roaster weights of four to five pounds, he believes. Because of longer feeding, Mr. Watkins looks for steady prices in poultry for the coming months, in spite of the present apparent slump.

FRUIT SPRAY NOT POISONOUS

Many people pause before eating an apple to wonder whether there is enough poison left on it from the spraying done early in the summer to cause a stomach ache or any other digestive disarrangement, says Dr. B. B. Fulton, of the Entomology Department, Iowa State College. It is at this time of year, when spraying is being started, that the most queries concerning this question come to Mr. Fulton's office.

It has been experimentally proven, according to Mr. Fulton, that lead and arsenic, both of which are used in sprays, have an accumulative effect, but there is no record in the United States of people having died from this poison or of having been even slightly hurt from eating such fruit.

In spite of a lack of direct proof, Mr. Fulton says that the British government is now enforcing a regulation preventing the sale of fruit containing more than one-hundredth of a grain of poison per pound. The United States government is taking steps to enforce such a ruling on interstate shipments of fruit, allowing, however, two and a half times as much poison per pound, which is still well under the range of any possibility of producing harmful effects, Dr. Fulton says.

"Such regulations probably mean, however, that the codling moth will be controlled some other way than by arsenical sprays, especially during the latter part of the season," Mr. Fulton said. "Fruit growers will either have to control the last brood of moth with non-poisonus sprays which kill the eggs, such as miscible oils, or give special emphasis to gaining more thoro control of the first brood, thus lessening the second brood."

WORN SHADES

When a window shade is cracked and broken at the lower end, it may be made to do longer service, by taking it off the roller and turning it end for end. The end which was tacked to the roller is hemmed and the curtain stick is run through it. The worn end is tacked to the roller. Small tacks must be used to prevent injury to the spring in the roller.

1—The Pipestone Quarries in Minnesota are well known because of the Indian lore and legend associated with the peculiarly reddish stone found here. This stone was used by the Indians for making peace pipes. Large rocks called "The Three Maidens" are the subject of a legend of fierce battles between warring tribes. These quarries are part of the setting of Longfellow's immortal poem, "Hiawatha." Near State Highways 47 and 6.

SCHOOL YEAR CLOSES

Last Friday evening the Commencement exercises marked the closing of the year's school work of the Meservey Consolidated District. The program was held at the Reformed church but owing to the inclement weather the crowd was not large, altho a good attendance considering the disagreeable night.

The speaker was the Rev. Clinton Smith, Supt. of the Allen Memorial Hospital at Waterloo. He used for his subject, "A Crown Set With Pearls." He said this should be a crown of individuality. Following are the pearls he used for illustration: The first, Intellect. He said the price of an education is our desire, for it is the desire to learn. Second, Thought Life. "As a man thinketh, so is he." Third, Imagination. "Our dreams become deeds. Life is the history of our dreams." Fourth, The Art of Appreciation. "How essential and vital it is to learn the art of appreciation, the secret of this is gratefulness." Fifth, Influence. "The supreme importance is what we mean to people. What the world needs today is warm-hearted mankind." Sixth, Friendships. "It is important that we get together on a basis of friendship. The kind of friends we need are those who sympathize and show a kindly interest." Cheerfulness. He stressed the thought that what the world needs today is sunshine, cheerfulness and happiness. The last pearl was that of Possibilities. He said each one has some peculiar talent, and the marvelous possibilities in store for each individual are, but the outcome of the desire to reach out for them. He closed by announcing his text, taken from Matt 7, the 6th verse, "Cast not your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet, and turn again and rend you." He expressed the desire that all might wear their crown set with these pearls queenly and kingly grace.

Prof. H. M. Taulbee presented the diplomas to the one Senior graduate and also to the 8th grade graduates. He addressed the class in a few well chosen words and expressed himself as being fairly well satisfied with the year's work, taking everything into consideration.

A warning has been sent out to protect the people in ambitions communities from being swindled in what is believed to be a stock selling proposition. Men visit a town presumably in search of a location for a factory to be used in converting corn-stalks into building board and other commodities. After sufficient interest has been aroused it is believed that a stockselling campaign will be inaugurated. Several such enterprises are awaiting a little more local enthusiasm. Grinnell was recently visited by a fakir who had a very plausible proposition. He was going to erect a big shoe factory to employ seven or eight hundred men, free lunches for the workers, shower baths, swimming pools and a hundred and one other luxuries. While he was working up enthusiasm for his project some telegrams were sent by Grinnell parties asking about the fellow's financial standing in what he claimed was his home city in the east. Before replies were received branding him as a fakir he suspicioned what was in the air and skipped out.

R. G. Clark, state food and dairy commissioner under the department of agriculture, says that the average return to the farmer for eggs is at least 2 cents per dozen higher than before the egg candling law went into effect. This means an increased return to the farmers of approximately $2,700,000, as nearly 135,000,000 dozen eggs were sold by Iowa farmers last year," said Clark. "This increased return has come to the farmer without additional expense, as it has been paid to him for better care for his eggs."

OBITUARY OF GOODELL WOMAN

Minnie Christie Nolte was born at Garner, Iowa, November 3, 1882 and died at her home three and one-half miles northwest of Goodell, May 22, 1927, aged forty-four years, six months and nineteen days. Death came about suddenly, as the result of a stroke of apoplexy, while she was cheerfully talking with her children. She was united in marriage with Julius E. Nolte, September 24, 1905 and since then has lived in this community. To this union six children were born, who with her husband survive her: Lureta Daniel, Virgil, Vera, Jennie and Benjamin. She is also survived by her mother, Mrs. James Christie, eight sisters, Mrs. Jennie Schriekengast, of Mason City, Mrs. Ella Garberich, of Lake Lillian, Minn; Mrs. Elizabeth Peterson, Mrs. Laura Peterson, Mrs. Veda Nolte, Mrs. Agnes Blickenderfer, of Garner; Misses Ione and Clara Christie and one brother, John Christie, her father having passed away March 28, 1908, and one sister, Josephine dieing in infancy. Mrs. Nolte has spent her entire life in this community. She was a woman of fine character, a kind and loving mother and neighbor. Cherokee High School, said to have the finest museum of any high school in the country, is soon to have an Egyptian mummy countless ages old. The mummy which formerly belonged to the famous Lininger art galleries, was purchased by an Omaha representative of the high school, and will be shipped to Cherokee shortly. There was no public announcement as to the price paid for the mummy. It will be a great novelty and of great educational value to Iowa to have this last remaining vestige of a vanished civilization.

Florida's boom was bursted by the coming of a great hurricane and tidal wave, the lower Mississippi river basin in submerged with surplus rainfall from 32 other states, so Texas comes into the limelight as the ideal place for those seeking a warmer climate in a section mostly "above the high water mark." Mrs. Mary Lizer, of LaPorte City, Black Hawk county, says that Cato Sels, commissioner of Indian affairs under President Wilson formerly a resident of La Porte City and later a lawyer of Vinton, now a citizen and booster of Fort Worth, Texas, is chairman of a committee on compilation and presentation of data for the All-Texas special train to leave June 19 for a tour of the north and east. Each phase of the industrial and social life of Texas will be handled by a specially selected speaker, an expert on the subject, Sells says. The resources, climate, industrial possibilities, laws and labor conditions will be explained.

Alumni and former students of the State Teachers College at Cedar Falls will have an opportunity at this year's commencement to witness the famous Fasoldt clock now being installed in the Alumni Memorial Campenile, by Dudley F. Fasoldt, its donor. The clock will fully complete the Alumni Memorial Campanile. The clock itself will stand on the second floor of the tower. From this the necessary rods and wires will rise to the four dials—some seventy feet upward where connections will be made with the hour and minute hands on the four dials. Other connections will be with the bells upon which the clock will sound the hours and quarter hours with the Westminster chime. The inscriptions selected for these bells are respectively, "The President, "The School Children of Iowa," "The Faculty," "Students and Alumni." The clock was made in 1876 and won the highest award at the Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia. The builder, Mr. Charles Pasoldt kept the clock in a mahogany and glass case in his shop for many years. The clock passed into the hands of his son, Otto, and later in possession of Dudley F., grandson. By the terms of the will of the builder of the clock, when disposed of, was to be given to the municipality or institution that could supply the most appropriate setting and surroundings.

The people of northeastern Iowa will be privileged to witness a "military expedition" for the next few days because of the annual trek of infantrymen and cavalrymen from Fort Des Moines on their way overland to Sparta, Wisconsin. Town along the route will be notified a few days in advance of the probable arrival of the soldiers. The Ninth Field Artillery is a part of the force. The soldiers will camp out and supplies for the men and food for horses and mules will be in readiness when the campsite is reached, having been located in advance. Col. F. Doyle is in command of the organization, which will reach its destination in about ten days and remain until about August 1. The Ninth field artillery will engage in practice at Camp Sparta and assist in training organized reserve officers and R. O. T. C. members.

Readers are indebted to no current novelist so much as to George Marsh for depicting the reality as well as the romance of that wild region referred to in general terms as the Hudson Bay country. No one has a better knowledge of the great and diversified stretch of country that rises from the shores of the immense bay nor of the rugged, courageous people who live there and the many dangers and thrilling characteristics of their everyday lives. The little tragedies, the big heartaches, the pathos, the deep love, the grim hate and strength of purpose of these dwellers in the great white places have never been more truly or more vividly described than by him.

George Marsh.

In the present story the author does not go quite so far north as in some of his previous tales. Action is confined to the James Bay region, which, while somewhat nearer home, is still sufficiently wild for the purposes of virile romance. The fur trading posts are a little nearer to civilization and more numerous than in the barren reaches of the Far North, but the wilderness characteristics of the country are not essentially less, nor the types of inhabitants and the sort of life they lead much different.

Being the southern extension of Hudson Bay, the body of water denominated as James Bay, has a milder summer but a scarcely less terrifying winter than the other. Its uplands are no less bleak nor its frozen mysteries less intriguing. Winter is the period and an isolated trading post the scene of Mr. Marsh's story.

CHAPTER I

Out where sinister cloud banks fused with gray waters the sullen bay moaned fitfully. Along shore, plover, sandpiper and yellow-legs, godwit and curlew fed behind the retreating tide, while restless flocks of teal and pintail patrolled the flats between the marshes and the sea. Inland, where mice-hunting hawk-owls wheeled and dipped low over the grass flats, black duck rose from a pool as a heavily burdened figure made its way slowly toward a tent on an alder-grown tongue of higher land thrusting seaward into the marsh. As the man neared the camp, a dog barked. Then the warning, rough and sharp, softened to whines and yelps of recognition. Plunging at a stake, a huge airedale wriggled an ecstatic welcome to his goose-laden master.

"Hello, Shot, old boy!" With an exclamation of relief the man stretched his arms, for his load had been heavy. He was rangy and well made, his lean, strongly modeled features bronzed by wind and sun. From the corner of the right eye a scar crossed the cheek bone to the ear.

Placing his gun in the tent, the goose-hunter freed the plunging dog. Throughout the long hours of the day a prisoner at his stake, nose tortured by the scent, eyes hungry with the sight of passing duck and geese, the airedale went mad at his release.

While the animal worked off his pent energy in thrashing through the alders and long grass in the vicinity of the camp, his master started a fire and put on a kettle of goose to boil; then went in search of drift cedar, for a September norther on the west coast of James bay may blow for days, and cedar kindlings kept dry in a tent are useful.

In an hour the marshes were purple with dusk. Then over the bay an unbroken roar as of a thousand guns, coupled with thrusts of light, signaled the turn of the tide, and the barrage of wind and rain opened. Along the wide beaches thundered the surf. A mile back in the rocking alders, in a low tent anchored and propped against the pounding of the wind, a man lay with his dog.

As Garth Guthrie listened to the clamor of the wind, the far drumbeat of the advancing tide, the drive of the rain like machine-gun bursts on his tent, his thoughts followed the throbbing years through which he had just lived. Here, in this wild night on the gray coast of the bay, how shadowy it seemed—that war which had caught him up, a boy fresh from college, and dropped him a man, scarred of body—disillusioned. Even Ethel seemed shadowy, although her last letter brought up the coast by canoe packet from Fort Albany hardly two weeks before, had flicked him with remorse—regret, almost, for his decision to winter again on the bay—Ethel, whom he had taken by storm (as he thought) at the time of his short leave home, in Montreal, after the tragic Somme.

It had been a typical war wooing. Enlisting as a private, he had gone overseas with the first Canadian division, and returned, late in 1916, a veteran platoon leader, wearing a wound stripe and the Military cross; for one morning, in his English hospital, Lieut. Garth Guthrie had received a double surprise—a decoration for gallantry and sixty days' home leave while his wounded left arm recovered its strength. This last was patently the work of his older brother, Charles, whose Montreal machine shops were running night and day on government shell contracts, for home leave was rare among the Canadians.

Then he had met Ethel.

With a boy of twenty-four, who, two years before, had carried the dreams of a college senior into the shambles of Flanders, the hours spent with the lovely Ethel Falconer could march to but one fulfillment. A member of the nursing corps organized by Clara Guthrie, Garth's efficient sister-in-law, the girl had captured his imagination at their first meeting. Youth, war, and Mrs. Guthrie had done the rest.

So young Lieutenant Guthrie, wounded and decorated for bravery, and brother of the maker of munitions and member of government boards, had, in those tense, dramatic days, found to his delight that the course of true love often runs surprisingly smooth. In a manner foreign to earlier generations, Ethel Falconer had met the impetuosity of the ardent young soldier with a response equally frank. The days of his leave were too cruelly short to be wasted. In a week she was wearing his ring.

Then came the parting and the two ghastly years—nightmares of grime and slaughter, soul-harrowing months of alternate hope and despair, followed by—victory! To the man lying in the tent shaken by the storm returned the face of Ethel, vivid as when, on his return from overseas, he stood at the rail of his ship being warped to its pier.

It had been a proud and happy homecoming for Maj. Garth Guthrie, D. S. O., but the three wound stripes on the sleeve of his tunic were not empty symbols. There remained to the man in the tent the clear-cut memory of the moment when his yearning arms had released her and Ethel had gasped, "Oh, Garth, how thin and old you've grown!" Then, as he turned to hug Clara and his brother, the ill-concealed start—the look of pain when Ethel Falconer first saw the red scar furrowing his cheek from eye to ear. His letters had casually mentioned a scratch on the face, for it was gas which had held him weeks in the hospital. Until he met Ethel that morning on the pier he had forgotten—he was disfigured.

So poignant was the memory that the man, stretched on his blankets in the dim candle light instinctively raised his right hand to trace with his fingers the course of the bullet which had seared his face. Then with much grunting a hairy body wriggled its way to a place beside him; the moist nose of a massive, leonine head was thrust into his face, while from a deep throat came low noises.

"Etienne is surely making a wet night of it in the bush, Shot," said the man, as the wind drove the rain in bursts against the straining fly of the tent. Then with the hairy bulk of the contented dog sprawled against the length of his recumbent body, head propped on one hand while the other rubbed the airedale's ears, Guthrie's thoughts were again with his homecoming, two years before.

The tense days following his landing marched past his dreaming eyes in a pageant of camp life and military duties preceding the discharge of his battery; swift hours with Ethel, dinners with his family, reunions with old friends. Again he rode through cheering thousands in the final review of his brigade.

He chuckled at the memory of Shot, marching with battalion headquarters in full field kit and wearing a blanket with its wound stripe.

At the time of his discharge the surgeons had shaken their heads over his lungs. "You're not out of the woods yet," he had been told. "A long rest in the open air, or you'll have trouble with that chest." But a desk in the office of Charles Guthrie waited him and he had kept his own counsel.

"You're twenty-six and have a lot to learn."

Hot blood had darkened Garth's face. "Lost five years? Where would you and your money be if millions of us hadn't lost five years?" he blurted.

"Oh, you know I appreciate all that, old chap," soothed the smug Charles. "It's unnecessary for me to repeat how proud I am of your record, but you know nothing about the business as yet; and I want to see you in a position to marry."

True, Garth had acknowledged, he knew nothing of the Guthrie Steel company, which, created and developed by the energy and ability of Charles Guthrie, had, through war contracts, made his brother a millionaire. And then there was Ethel, waiting. So, instead of the summer in the open air on which the doctors had insisted, he had gone to work.

The fingers of the man lying in the tent shut convulsively on the thick mane of his dog as he remembered the pain which thrust through him when he had first realized that Ethel never voluntarily walked or sat on his right side. Coming from a world of broken men, where the blind and the maimed were commonplaces, he had almost forgotten the shock the scar on his cheek had given her the day of his homecoming. Unpleasant though it might be, this red gash, to look upon, it was nevertheless the symbol of his service, the measure of his manhood. Yet to the girl who loved him, it seemed a thing of aversion—repulsive. Following the discovery, he had, on meeting her ironically covered the cicatrix with his hand, or turned his head, but the red shame and the passionate tears of protest, which it invariably induced, checked him.

That Ethel Falconer was not of the fiber of many of the women he knew, who patently cherished the scars of their men—gloried, seemingly, in these proofs of their sacrifice for Canada and the empire, had forced itself upon the consciousness of Guthrie with a bitterness with which his philosophy vainly contended. Vehement as were her protests, her denials, when, in a moment of depression and disillusion, he had suggested that to hold her to a promise made in 1916 to a man whose face was presentable and body sound, was grossly unfair, now that he had returned to her the flotsam of war, scarred, changed, he nevertheless knew that Ethel, too, was having her bad half hours. But notwithstanding his moment of doubt, his gray moods, due as much to physical condition as unhappiness, Garth Guthrie had valiantly clung to the dreams of the fair girl he had taken back overseas with him after the golden fortnight in 1916.

Then, after six months in the office and foundry of Charles Guthrie, the lungs of the returned soldier had developed a condition which medical authorities diagnosed as alarming. A certain sanatorium in the foothills of the Laurentians was the imperative order, and the wedding in the spring, for which Ethel and Clara Guthrie had so meticulously planned, was indefinitely postponed.

With his dog, trained as a puppy behind the lines in 1918, Guthrie left Montreal to make the fight for lost health—and happiness. And before the snows left the Quebec hills and the spruces dripped in April thaws, he was well on the road to the first. Six months in the Laurentians had healed the lung lesions and put back the hard weight he had lost, but it was under strict parole that the Garth Guthrie of old, burned to a deep tan by the sunglare from the March crust, one day walked in on Ethel and his sister-in-law. That night at dinner, through the course of which the practical Charles dwelt at length on his plans for his brother's apprenticeship in a special branch of the growing business, the sober eyes of Garth lit with frank amusement—the hint of a smile repeatedly lifted the corners of his mouth. At length the older brother abruptly demanded:

"You don't seem to be taking me seriously, Garth?"

"My dear Charlie," the man on parole rejoined, "I most certainly am deeply grateful for this interest in my future—these plans of yours; but I have put off telling you something—"

He paused, avoiding the startled look of Ethel, as he continued: "The big man at the hospital talked like a father to me this morning before I left. He said," deliberately continued Garth, "that it was a year in the open air for me, or . . . well, he wouldn't give much for my chances."

"Oh, Garth!" Slowly the blond head of the girl drooped to his shoulder, as the pained eyes of Clara met her husband's shocked look.

"My poor boy! You—you mean he actually ordered you away—for a year?" stammered the incredulous Charles.

Garth's arm shepherded the quivering shoulders of the girl, as he nodded to his brother over her golden head.

"But you look so fit—so rugged, Garth," protested Clara. "You've recovered all your weight. I don't understand."

FACTS
about used car allowances

Most new car sales now involve the trading-in of a buyer's used car. More and more people are asking: "Why should my used car seem to have several values?.... Why should dealers in different makes of cars offer me allowances differing materially?.... Does the largest allowance offered mean the best deal for me?"

Here are basic facts:

1 Your used car has seemingly different values because competitive dealers are bidding to sell you a new car.

2 Your used car has only one fundamental basis of value: what the dealer who accepts it in trade can get for it in the used car market.

3 The largest trade-in allowance which is offered on your used car is not necessarily the best deal for you. Sometimes it is; but sometimes it is not.

4 An excessive allowance may mean, that you are paying an excessive price for the new car in comparison with its real value.

The couple were attended by Miss Loreen VanHaaften, sister of the groom and Mr. Ross D. Box, brother of the bride.

The bride was becomingly attired in a gown of ashes of roses crepe de chine and the bridesmaid wore a gown of rose crepe, while the groom and best man were attired in gray suits.

Grand Jury To Convene Monday

Await Developments In Eagle Grove Bank Failure Case

The grand jury elected at the April term of court is called to convene in Clarion next Monday. It is generally understood that the session of the grand jury was recessed to await the report of accountants who examined the books of the defunct Citizens State bank of Eagle Grove. Whether the grand jury will discover anything in their findings that will cause them to take action cannot now be known.

Inasmuch as the next regular term of court will not be held until September 27, district judges have set vacation terms of court to be held at various points in this district. In Wright county a term will be held July 12 by Judge T. G. Garfield, and another term August 8 by Judge Sherwood A. Clock. The order specifies that "Only vacation orders will be considered. No trial will be held except short emergency cases."

Tillinghast & Co. seeks recovery from J. O. Beckett on two notes at a total of $839.13 which they acquired from the Clarion Savings bank.

L. B. Hulsebus brings action against the town council of Dows who, in their capacity as a board of equalization made what the plaintiff terms an excessive assessment against lots 7, 8 and 9, block 17, of the original town of Dows. It was originally assessed at $1500, which amount was reduced by the board of review to $1000, but Hulsebus claims it is inequitable to place it at more than $425. He asks an order of court establishing this assessable valuation.

Louisa Jones and John Huibsoh were given judgment against Anna and Henry M. Imbiden for $566.64 and costs, and order was issued for foreclosure of a mortgage on lot 8, block 28, Eagle Grove. Interest of the Farmers Co-Operative Co. of Eagle Grove, which claimed an equity in the property, was denied.—Monitor.

LUNCHEON CLUB HAVE INTERESTING DISCUSSION

At the meeting Thursday of the Luncheon club, an interesting discussion took place regarding several things of community benefit. Among them was the question of a tourist park, and whether such a park, if secured, should be a free camp or a paid one. Another suggestion brought forward was that of keeping cars out of the block in which the band plays Wednesday evenings, and placing seats along the curbing so that the crowds along the walks could see and hear the band better. A number of town people have been in the habit of parking their cars early in the evening, in the block where the band is to play, and farmers arriving late are forced to park outside this block, and often at quite a distance from the band. It was suggested that by keeping cars out of the block entirely, and arranging seats along the walk, everyone would be better served and country people given a better chance to hear the band.

NEW BRIDGES COMING ALONG NICELY

Workmen are now engaged in spreading the dirt at the new bridge south of town, which replaces the old Barry bridge. Within a short time they will start work on the new channel for the Iowa river. The course of the stream is to be changed to run under the new bridge, which straightens primary No. 15 at this point, eliminating the dangerous turn and curve. There still remains some steel work to be done on the bridge, and the grading of approaches before the new bridge will be ready for use.

Work on the new bridges north of town, where primary 15 is being straightened, is progressing well, altho it has been held up by the rains this spring.

The National Live Stock and Meat Board, Chicago, announces that Miss Eleanor McMilin, Ames high school girl, has won the championship of the state in the Fourth National Meat Story Contest. Her story was selected by a committee of prominent home economics women as the best of the many submitted in the state and also placed third in the entire central district comprising thirteen states. MAURICE TRACY WINS COLUMBIA MEDAL

Maurice Tracy, son of Mr. and Mrs. Vern Tracy, of Belmond, won first place in the verse contest at Columbia college, Dubuque, with his verse, "Orpheus and Eurydice." The Dubuque Telegraph-Herald carried the following item about it:

"Maurice J. Tracy, of Belmond, Iowa, won the gold medal and first place, in the Columbia college verse contest, according to an announcement in the last issue of the Lorain, Columbia publication. Tracy's "Orpheus and Eurydice," a piece of verse which is considered to be among the finest poetic contributions ever appearing in the "College Spokesman," was the winning poem.

"Tracy has been a leading contributor to the college literary publication, the "Spokesman," this year, and most of his works are in verse form. A master of meter and rythm, his work is already among the finest ever produced by a Columbia student, and gives promise of developing extraordinary merit. Tracy has also contributed some prose to the Spokesman, and he is considered a leading competitor for the essay contest next year. He has been chosen with James J. Donohue, to edit the Spokesman next season. The winning poem appeared in the autumn number of the magazine.

Maurice's many Belmond friends rejoice in the distinguished honor which has come to him.

She is a graduate of the Belmond school and since her graduation has been engaged in teaching. For the past several years she taught at Corwith.

Toy guns not more than an inch and a half in length are the newest menace to life and health in Des Moines. Verle Carson took his "gun" to school and a little later a boy complained that bee had stung him, just as the gun was fired. The teacher, her suspicion aroused, began an investigation, and asked to examine the pistol. It went off in her hand and she was severely burned. The shot lodged in her thumb, making necessary a deep incision to remove it

In the report of Miss Giesman, the Red Cross nurse who recently concluded her examination of the Belmond school students, some interesting facts are brought to light regarding the health of Belmond's children. One is that out of a total of 588 children examined, 412 had physical defects of one kind or another. That is a very large percentage, it seems to us, of Belmond's youth who are defective. But the most astonishing thing of it all is, that ofter having these defects discovered, pointed out, and explained to child and parents, out of the 412 defective only 22 had those defects corrected. It would seem thot there are some parents who are falling down sadly in their duty to their children. The most precious of all possessions in this life is Health. With it one may conqueor the world; without it, one is under a handicap that will always hold back and deny. Full enjoyment of life is possible only where there is health. The defects found by the nurse are doubtless in the great majority of cases minor ones, and can be more or less easily corrected now. If allowed to go unchecked there is the possibility of something serious developing. Defects of the teeth were by far the largest, totalling 309 cases. This is something easy to get at and usually easy to correct. A visit to the dentist now may save the child much pain and trouble later. Defects of vision numbered 78 cases; very probably every one of these cases can be corrected or cured by immediate attention. Throat trouble was found in 136 cases, and the chances are the physician can correct most of them without much trouble. It does not pay to neglect your health, any way you figure it. Every parent whose child was found defective should take immediate steps to have that defect corrected at once.

Last Thursday noon quite a bit of the time of the Luncheon club was taken up in discussing whether a free tourist park or a paid camp was better for Belmond. Seems rather like picking out a name for the baby before it arrives—you don't know whether to call it John or Johanna. After we get the tourist park there will be plenty of opportunity to decide whether it is to be free or paid. The park isn't here yet, and if anybody wants to place a bet that it will arrive this year, we know where they can place it. Belmond will not have a tourist park this year. We all know Belmond needs one, that it's disgraceful we haven't one, but we won't do anything about it except talk, and we have been doing that for several years. Very likely next spring we'll start talking about it again. If words were nickels, we could have built the finest park in America long ago. Much more can be accomplished by discussing the weather than trying to decide whether tourists camp free or pay for it.

The suggestion that cars be kept out of the block in which the band plays Wednesday evenings is a good one. It should be carried out, and seats placed along the walk. Five hundred persons could be seated in a block, something which anyone who has stood around for a couple hours will appreciate. The cost would be nominal, the comfort immeasurable. Country people would then have an opportunity to see the band, get close enough to hear it, and be comfortable while doing it. The idea ought to be carried thru before another concert is played.

WHY NOT AN IOWA CORN SPECIAL TO THE EAST?

Municipalities are interested in the national reputation of their home states and Davenporters can well afford to give their best thought and energy to the best means of advertising Iowa and enhancing the prestige of our comminwealth thruout the nation. Patriotic individual citizens are doing this now and Iowa has many of them. Cities are doing the same, Davenport in her campaign among the eastern manufacturers never neglecting an opportunity to accent the advantages of the state in which the city is so happily situated.

But if progressive and far-seeing municipalities such as Davenport, and there are many such in Iowa, were to band together and undertake an advertising campaign in the interests of their home state, immeasurably greater results could be achieved than are now gained thru unconnected effort.

The Chamber of Commerce ofers a patriotic, experienced and sympathetic agency thru which such a cooperative movement can be carried out. The Iowa Chambers have already mapped out a publicity campaign, working with Gov. Hammill's agricultural-industrial committee.

Why could not Iowa inject a spectacular element into its advertising campaign by organizing a Corn Special Train and running it to the East?

This Corn Special would have wonderful advertising possibilities. It would bulge with agricultural prosperity. It would carry proof of the immeasurable richness of Iowa soil. It would "show the world," if you will, that Iowa is a good state in which to live, that Iowans are prosperous, up-to-date, alive and well worth cultivating as customers and well worth patronizing as producers of thousands of manufactured articles which serve human wants and needs. Davenport alone could contribute for this Corn Special exhibit a hundred major products which its manufacturing concerns are now selling thruout the county. Des Moines, Cedar Rapids, Clinton, Muscatine, Sioux City, Mason City, Waterloo, Ames and scores of other cities could do likewise.

The Chambers of Commerce, Commercial clubs and Boards of Trade in these cities could unite the agricultural, manufacturing, banking and general business interests for this common purpose and could furnish the co-operative direction for such an advertising feature.

A Corn Special would offer a wonderful opportunity to Iowa showmanship.—Davenport Chamber of Commerce News.

VALUE OF FARM LAND FOR PUBLIC UTILITIES

Wallace's Farmer: Most corn belt farmers have not had experience with granting public utilities the right to construct power lines, etc. across their farms. New England farmers have had much experience along this line, and the New England Homestead recently tells of the decision of the United States supreme court which is of vital present interest to New England farmers and of great future interest to Iowa farmers. It seems that public utility companies, in acquiring farm land under condemnation proceedings, have tried to purchase it on the basis of its value as farm land only. The United States supreme court says that other factors of value must be taken into account. The mere fact that the farm land is available for use as a right-of-way for a high tension line enters into its value, and apparently this will be taken into account henceforth. Land may be worth far more for power transmission purposes than it is worth for farming. Whenever our readers lose land by condemnation proceedings, they should keep this principle of the United States supreme court in mind. It perhaps can be applied not only to public utility power lines but also to condemnation of land for roads by the State Highway Commission.

EMBARRASING QUESTION

The professor was illustrating to his class the remarkable smallness of the world. "Gentlemen," he said, "let me tell you of my own experience. While in Paris last summer I met a man from my home town. I met him in Alexandria, and this year, while visiting the Yellowstone, I encountered him for the fourth time."

A disgusted voice broke in: "Aw, why didn't you pay him what you owed him in the first place?"

Teacher: "Give a synonym for hold-up."
Johnnie: "Suspenders."

"SAFETY FIRST" IN CHARACTER

Six boys were brought in juvenile court for petty thefts, window smashing and other mischevious depredations. Evidently the lads were not criminals at heart, but something was wrong. The parents and judge, after talking it all over with the boys, held a session among themselves to discover what was the matter and why the parents had failed to teach those children character.

Questionings revealed the fact that the children had been permitted a wide range of freedom, grew up on the streets, and took lessons in character from the alley gang.

"Why did I not run the streets and grow up that way?" asked the judge, in trying to help the parents solve their difficulties. "It was because my mother kept close tab on me; and whenever she sent me downtown on an errand, she never failed to say one thing to me as I left the house. What do you suppose that one thing was?"

It was a school teacher who was in on the discussion who guessed the answer: "Come right straight home." The lad who has a mother who keeps track of where he is and insists from little boyhood that he "come right straight home" is not likely to tread the paths which lead first to petty thievery, then to stealing autos, then to house entry, burglary, hold-ups and murder, and finally to prison for life.

But it is not enough to "make" the boy or girl stay at home. Home should be an attractive place—full of books and pictures and games and music—else the lad and lassie will presently break away and go to the bad fast because he will feel that he has been abused and deprived. You cannot build stone walls high enough to keep a boy or girl straight.

The ideal home is like a club house to the child and his friends. His parents should be his pals, interested in all his concerns and willing to permit the house to be mussed up, the yard used for play, and the evening hours for merriment, when it would be more comfortable for adults to be in bed. It is a real job to be a parent—but, such a worth while job!

A reasonable admixture of work and responsibility and understanding of the old fashioned words "duty" and "self-sacrifice" are useful in character building.

"All work and no play, makes Jack a dull boy.

Love—sure and never-failing, which gives a child a constant feeling of confidence—is a prime essential of child welfare. Next comes "sympathetic understanding" such that Johnnie dares tell Dad and Mother everything because he knows they will understand and will not judge harshly or be unreasonable.

All of these features are such as tend to draw the child in, toward home life. Beware those which tend to drive him out. Safety first in character building depends upon his keeping pretty close home until his habits and ideals of character are well established.

FASHIONS, FADS, FOIBLES

Blue of every shade and lovely, cool, greens are the most popular colors of the season. Drapery, in pressed folds, falling from the waist to the ankles is a new feature of evening dresses. Evening dresses have very uneven hemlines with dips which descend far below the knees. These dips conform to no rule, except irregularity.

Large hats are making a brave effort to supplant the close, small hats of recent seasons. They are well for dress hats, but the small hat is better for the business woman and in public conveyances and for the woman with the large face, or the very short woman.

Printed summer fabrics are very popular. They are usually of good dyes and will wash well without fading. Small patterns are taking the place of the large patterns of yesteryear. Edge finishes, collars or trimming bands are made of a plain color the shade of the background or of one of the figures.

Shoe styles have run wild this seasin. They are fussy, combine all kinds of leathers and many fancy cut-outs. The chic woman will choose the plainer styles. Conservative styles in shoes are always smarter. Evening slippers are allowed more elaborateness. Shoes for formal and evening wear show a tendency to come higher on the foot.

DRY CLEANING

Many women do their own dry cleaning. Naptha gasoline is a good cleaning agent, but it is so explosive one hesitates to recommend its use. Used with the greatest of caution, it does excellent work. If the garment to be cleaned is badly spotted, lay it on the ironing board and scrub it with a brush, but take only very little bit of it out for use at one time, as it is so explosive. Pour a little into a saucer and dip the brush into it. Avoid too much friction, brush lightly.

To wash a garment in naptha gasoline, let it lie and soak awhile, perhaps overnight. Then souse it up and down and the dirt falls out. Do not rub the garment as the friction might cause an explosion. After sousing it up and down, squeeze out the surplus liquid and hang up to dry and air. If it blows in a strong wind, it will not need ironing. If one must press out any wrinkles, do not do this until the garment is well aired and the naptha has evaporated.

One woman washed several neckties, by putting them in a fruit can and letting them soak over night. In the morning she shook the can lightly and the dirt fell out. After the dirt has settled to the bottom of the liquid, the clear naptha gasoline may be poured off and used for cleaning again. It must be kept in a safe place where there is no danger from fire.

Lady: "I'll take my toast cut thin and not too hard; my eggs turned once; my coffee not too strng; the cream thinned a bit; just one lump of sugar; and . . .

Waiter: "Yes, madam, and any special design on the dishes?"

THE WORLD'S GREAT EVENTS

ALBERT PAYSON TERHUNE

Frederick the Great

AN UNHAPPY boy, imprisoned and in danger of death, was one day forced by his father to stand at the grated window of his cell and watch his dearest friend executed. The boy was Prince Frederick of Prussia, later known as Frederick II, or Frederick the Great. He had a sadder, more unfortunate boyhood than did any beggar in his kingdom. His father, Frederick William, was a stern, harsh king, and a harsher parent. He was military-mad and would allow his young son Frederick to study nothing but the art of war. The boy loved poetry, music and science.

It was, in a measure, the old story of Peter the Great and Alexis over again. And it almost had the same terrible climax. For, at last, wearied by his father's abuse and cruelty, and resentful of the injustice to which he was subjected, Frederick made up his mind to run away from the life he hated and to take refuge with his mother's brother, King George I of England. His most intimate friend, Lieutenant Katt, helped him escape from Berlin; but their flight was discovered and they were caught and brought back. Then came such punishment as few fathers could have devised.

Frederick was sent to prison and Katt was put to death directly outside the prince's cell. King Frederick William then demanded that Frederick renounce all rights to the throne. This the prisoner pluckily refused to do. The king in rage declared he would put Frederick to death, and was with difficulty dissuaded from the plan. He contented himself with exiling his son from court; and, in 1733, when Frederick was but twenty-one, forced him to marry a princess for whom the young bridegroom had not the slightest liking. For seventeen years after that Frederick lived in semi-seclusion on one of his estates, only returning to public life when, on the death of his father, in 1740, he came to the throne of Prussia.

During the forty-six years of his reign Frederick well earned his title of "The Great." He found Prussia a secondary German state with a population of barely 2,240,000. He left it rich in new possessions, territory and power and with a population of 6,000,000.

The fair principalities of Silesia, according to Frederick's ideas, ought to belong to Prussia. So, the same year he became king, he set out to acquire them. A two years' war followed, in which Frederick's hardly acquired military education stood him in good stead. For he was victorious, and Silesia was annexed to Prussia. Frederick ruled his new possessions well and with mildness; and, although a Protestant, allowed religious freedom to Silesian Catholics. Knowing the unsettled condition of Europe and having fresh conquests in view, the victor now devoted himself to building up the strength of his armies; and, in 1743, he annexed East Friesland to his kingdom.

Austria, so Frederick believed, had designs on Silesia; so he formed an alliance with France and other countries and (to keep Austria's mind on matters of defense rather than aggression) invaded Bohemia in 1744. But the Austrians and Saxons combined and repelled the invasion. The campaign dragged on with varying fortunes until a peace treaty was signed by whose terms Frederick still held Silesia, and received $1,000,000 war indemnity.

Eleven years of peace followed, which were spent by Frederick in strengthening Prussia at home and abroad, in promoting arts and industries and in raising his army to 160,000 men. This peace period was broken by a rumor that Russia, Austria and Saxony were combining against Prussia. Fearing lest he might lose his cherished provinces of Silesia, Frederick forestalled the allies' action by invading Saxony. This started a seven years' war, in which Frederick won little except a military reputation that rendered him a strong and decisive power in European politics. When peace was declared he used his own private fortune in repairing the ravages made by war.

In the same year he concluded a treaty with Russia and was active in the first partition of Poland. By the terms of this division he acquired all of Polish Prussia and part of Great Poland to the north. Henceforth, Frederick's kingdom was divided into West and East Prussia.

The crowning act of Frederick's statecraft, and one that stirred the political system of the whole continent (as well as marking Prussia's first open attempt to lead all the German states), was the forming, in 1785, of the "Furstenbund" (League of Princes) of the German kingdoms and principalities into a solid federation; thus beginning what, in 1870, his descendant completed.

In 1786 Frederick the Great died, leaving his nephew, who succeeded him, a kingdom his genius had increased in area by 29,000 square miles, a population increased by 3,600,000, a treasury containing over $70,000,000 (the richest in Europe), an army of 200,000 and boundless credit with every other nation.

Thus, in his seventy-fourth year, perished the greatest of German monarchs, a man whose father had thought him a fool and unfit to reign.

FREE AIR

Last week we went up to Cross Lake, Minnesota, and spent a few days with "Dad" Ingalls at his log cabin, and tried out the fishing.

* * * *

Being a newspaper editor, and always endeavoring to uphold the law, regardless of what it is, and being supposed to set an example, as it were, in obeying laws, and showing all due respect to them, we did not bring home more than the law allowed, which some others from Belmond have been known to do, on occasion.

* * * *

* * * *

Besides which, we didn't get any to speak of anyway. The fish are there all right—there are more fish in Dad's lakes around there—everybody calls 'em Dad's lakes, tho they really belong to Minnesota, or the government—there are more fish in 'em than there are Swedes in Minnesota. And that's saying something.

* * * *

We just weren't lucky, if you know what we mean. Maybe we didn't have the right kind of bait (you know), but chiefly it was probably too cold. But we had a fine time, just the same, and Dad certainly treated us white. Only trouble was, it was so terribly noisy at night.

* * * *

They certainly have some wonderful lightning in Minnesota; if you don't believe it, just ask Charlie Gealow. He can tell you what it smells like. The god of storms left a large size package about 20 feet from him one night.

* * * *

Si Packard is looking better than he ever did in his life—he's helping Dad Ingalls this summer—and sent his regards to Belmond friends. Si had certainly better stay in Minnesota if it is going to treat him like it has.

* * * *

We went over to Frank "Noisy" Baldridge's resort and visited awhile with Frank and his wife. They have a beautiful place there, and are steadily improving it. "Island View Lodge" is also on Cross Lake. That country up there agrees with Noisy, all right; he never looked so well in Belmond, and he's lost 50 pounds of the Iowa surplus he took along. They have six cottages they rent, with boats, bait, and the like, and they have enjoyed a very nice business. Frank is putting in some spare time just now slinging a wrench installing a plumbing job for a Minneapolis millionaire who is building a large summer home in that vicinity.

* * * *

Hasn't forgotten all Matt Holtzbauer taught him.

* * * *

Geo. Baldridge is running the store there, since he sold his Kanawha Cafe last year. Didn't get to see him, but had a pleasant chat with his son, Dudley.

* * * *

If you go to Minnesota this summer, be sure to drop in and visit Dad Ingalls and Mr. and Mrs. Baldridge; they'll enjoy seeing you, and you'll certainly enjoy both their places.

* * * *

Only change we found when we returned was the new sign the city has erected just west of the town bridge—

* * * *

"NO DUMPING ALOUD."

* * * *

Kindly take notice of that, and when you dump your tin cans and broken bottles, do it silently.

* * * *

Something's gotta be done about eliminating some of the city noises, and the dump pile is a good place to start.

NOT WORTH IT

It was in a county store in Arkansas. A one-gallus customer drifted in. "Gimme a nickel's worth of asafoetida."

The clerk poured some asafoetida in a paper bag and pushed it across the counter.

"Charge it," drawled the customer.

"What's your name?" asked the clerk.

"Honeyfunkel."

"Take it," said the clerk. "I wouldn't write asafoetida and Honeyfunkel for 5 cents."

The Independent's circulation is local. It is read by more people. And that's why its ads bring results.

AGRICULTURAL NEWS NOTES

52 MORE WILL QUIT GUESSING

The number of Iowa farmers who insist on profit from their milk cows is to increase next month when 52 more will start their herds on test in two new associations, one in Washington county and the other in Osceola. This will make more than 2,000 farmers of the state who are getting monthly reports of the milk and butterfat production, feed cost and profit or loss above feed cost for each of their cows.

Iowa, with 30,000, now ranks third in the United States for the number of cows in testing associations. The two new associations will probably add 600 or more cows to the list, who must answer to their owners whether or not they are profitable: The new association will bring the total of such organizations in Iowa to 85.

One of the most recent developments from cow testing association records is a study of the influence of sires in increasing or decreasing the production of a herd, according to Burt Oderkirk, of Iowa State College, who is in charge of cow testing association work in the state.

The records of the daughters of 103 bulls are now being studied in comparison with their dams' records in the Iowa State College Dairy Husbandry Extension office. Unfortunately, a sire must be five years of age before his first daughters have completed a year's record and their production can be compared with the dam's. An effort is being made to have bull pens erected to hold the sires on the farms over a longer period and thereby prevent sires of proven value being sent to the block.

In a recent comparison of the average production of dams and daughters, in which a total of 2,182 daughters' records were compared with those of their dams, the Bureau of Dairying, United States Department of Agriculture, found that the daughters produced an average of 377 pounds more milk and 19 pounds more butterfat than the dams. The dams produced an average of 342 pounds butterfat and the daughters 361.

In this study it was found that a few very inferior sires decreased greatly the production of the daughters as compared with the dams. Had the daughters of these inferior sires been omitted from the study, the average increase in production of daughters over dams would have been phenomenal.

STRAWBERRY SLUGS WORKING

Several strawberry patches in Iowa have suffered this spring from attacks of the strawberry slug, according to reports reaching the Entomology Department of Iowa State College. The strawberry slug is a pale green worm, which eats an oval-shaped hole in the leaves between the main veins. They injure the plants by defoliation when they are abundant.

This strawberry pest may be controlled by spraying the vines with a solution of 1 pound of lead arsenate to 50 gallons of water, according to B. B. Fulton, entomologist at Ames. This lead arsenate spray should not be applied until after the blossoming period is over or within two weeks of picking.

Some varieties may be in the stage now when this treatment is practical, Mr. Fulton says. If the berries have begun to ripen, fresh white hellebore dust may be used at the same rate, and this is non-injurious to human beings.

The strawberry slug should not be confused with the strawberry leaf roller, which is a much more active worm, living within a roll of leaves, and is a much more difficult insect to control.

WEANS 88 PIGS FROM 9 SOWS

His name is a secret—but one farmer who entered the Iowa pig crop contest to try for some of the cash prizes, which total $1,000, has weaned 88 pigs from his 9 sows, an average of almost 10 pigs per sow.

Others in the contest also have had the fates with them in the number of pigs saved per sow, according to E. L. Quaife, Iowa State College extension worker, who is assisting with the pig crop contest. One man with 12 sows has saved 99 pigs and another with 13 sows has 116 pigs. The names of these men will not be divulged until the contest closes next fall.

The object of the contest is to find out who in the state can produce the most pounds of pork in six months as an average for all of the sows farrowing. Any system of feeding and management which the farmer desires can be used. More than 200 have entered the contest.

Recently Mr. Quaife has travelled over most sections of the state and thru his observations and conversations is of the opinion that Iowa has more pigs this year than a year ago. Just how much of an increase there has been, he is not prepared to say, but feels confident that more sows were kept for farrowing than last year.

In Story county a survey among 42 farmers showed that they actually kept 99 more sows to farrow this year than a year ago. This was a 21 percent increase. A similar survey in Des Moines county revealed a 15 percent increase.

Despite the increased number of sows kept, many farmers have complained of small litters, Mr. Quaife says. Part of the difficulty, in the judgment of any thruout the state, is that the disease called "flu" among sow herds last fall at breeding time is the cause of some of the small, rather weak litters.

Some of the best hog growers, however, many of whom entered the pig crop contest, have had good success.

SPRING TIME—FLY TIME

"Mr. and Mrs. Fly with their ever-increasing family are now visiting us, and like some of our poor relations, are trying to board with us," says Dr. James Wallace, of the State Department of Health. "It would not be so bad if they were only half respectable citizens and would be content to eat a certain amount of our food without handling and messing over everything that the rest of us have to eat, and if they did not often carry disease germs to the food by their ubiquitous rummaging and did not multiply so rapidly that they soon preoccupy every room in the house and every place at the table.

"If there is any sphere where some form of birth control should be adopted it is in the fly family," says Dr. Wallace. "They have no conscience in this matter at all. One female will lay 120 eggs at a time. These eggs will hatch out in 10 days, the females from this batch, each start laying their eggs and this multiplication goes on by geometrical progression until the one female has become in the summer the mother, grandmother or progenitor of millions of flies. Some of the young offspring die, like our babies, but infant mortality, among flies in not high because the fly is an adult almost as soon as it is born from its pupa case. Do not therefore let any tender feeling toward the young, prevent you wiping out the family of Mrs. Fly.

"The fly has a disgusting habit that ought, in itself, to induce us to try to exterminate the race. The fly's sense of smell is acute but not very refined, because it is attracted by odors of putrid, excretory, and offensive matters and will feast upon these, but if it happens to light upon a sweet cake or something that it prefers to what it now has, it will proceed to literally empty the contents of its stomach on the cake or other food, in order to fill up on something more palatable to it. The fly family are therefore very undesirable boarders, and are "star boarders," because they never miss a meal and never pay a cent.

"Flies may be mechanical carriers of a great number of diseases. They are attracted to open sores and may carry disease from the infected to the non-infected. They undoubtedly are responsible for carrying typhoid fever germs from the excreta of cases or carriers, and if not excluded from the sick room may carry almost any or every disease that is communiable.

"Flies should be excluded by screening; any that do get into the house should be trapped and destroyed, but the most effective means of control is to eliminate all breeding places, such as accumulations near the home of horse manure, garbage, etc., to properly sanitate all out houses (toilets) and to avoid leaving matter exposed that will attract flies. Flies are very fond of milk and if that is spilled around or left exposed, flies are sure to be atracted. Flies do not like the dark, but it is poor practice to exclude sunlight from the home in order to keep out flies.

"A few good rules are:

1. Destroy the breeding place of flies.
2. Screen against flies.
3. Destroy those flies that enter the home.
4. Do not leave food exposed to attract flies.
5. Remember that one fly destroyed in the spring is as good as destroying thousands later in the year."

Iowa Homestead: If I might be pardoned any suggestions as to policis at Ames, I should state that the greatest advantages which can possibly accrue to this institution are to be derived through the cultivation of sympathetic contacts with the farmers of the state. Ames is not alone a school for students who take the regular courses of study there. It is and should be an agency reaching out to help every farmer of the state in making his work more profitable and his life more pleasant. The farmers should have a friendly feeling toward the school, regardless of whether they or their sons and daughters have been or are privileged to come into the closer contacts which result from membership in the student body.

IOWA CANNOT ESCAPE BORER, BUTCHER SAYS

Little hope that Iowa can escape the ravages of the corn borer, is held out by Fred D. Butcher, extension entomologist, who recently returned from a six weeks' trip into Ohio where he assisted with the corn borer clean-up.

"Iowa farmers may just as well get ready to 'live with' the corn borer for there is little chance that the pest can be avoided or eradicated," he said. "I did not find any in the infested region of Ohio who believed that the European corn borer can either be eradicated, or kept from spreading."

About 95 percent of the Ohio farmers in the infested regions have co-operated this spring in cleaning up stalk fields, Mr. Butcher estimates. The plan has been to burn the stalks after they have been cut and raked, to plow them under, or to tear them into shreds by means of a new machine known as a stubble beater.

Although plowing the stalks under does not kill the borers, they will come to the surface and search for a stalk into which to enter to pass into the pupa stage and from that into moths. If the stalks have all been plowed under, and the worm unable to find a satisfactory place in which to pass through the next stages in the life cycle, it will die, according to Butcher. Special attachments have been used on the plows to insure turning under all of the corn stalks.

No one knows yet how successful the clean up work has been in the borer infested regions, nor will anyone know before July, after the flight of the moths, Butcher says.

In Iowa but little active work will be done this season in combating the corn borer, according to Carl J. Drake, state entomologist, and Mark G. Thornburg, state secretary of agriculture, who are in charge of the campaign in this state. The work of scouting and investigation of reports of finding of the borer will be carried on this summer with renewed activity and the force of scouts will be augmented by a number of post-graduate college students who will aid in this work.

Reports from New York state are to the effect that the infestations in the fields there have been greatly reducted by removal of all corn stalks and trash and by clean plowing.

JUNE IS BRIDE'S CAKE MONTH

June, the month of weddings, calls forth pictures of a large, gaily decorated, white bride's cake. The cake used at the bride's table is a large round one, usually iced and decorated in white, according to Miss Belle Lowe, foods and nutrition expert, Iowa State College, Ames.

The wedding cake is usually iced with a plain white icing and decorated later, she says. Unless a person is skilled in cake icing and decorating, Miss Lowe recommends butter cream frosting for the decorating, because it is softer and does not set so rapidly. In decorating, a diagram of the design should be drawn and the icing applied with a pastry tube in the places desired.

2 lbs. powdered sugar
2 lbs. butter
2 1-2 lbs. flour
5 c. egg whites
7 tsp. baking powder
4 tsp. flavoring (kind desired) vanilla, orange or lemon and less of almond.

Beat one-half of the egg whites with a small amount of the sugar. Wash the butter in cold water to remove the salt. Cream the sugar and butter. To the creamed butter and sugar add the unbeaten half of the egg whites and mix. Fold in the flour. Then fold in the flavoring and the beaten half of the egg whites. Bake in a large round pan in a moderate oven about 2 hours. Wrap a piece of wet cloth around the edge of the pan to keep it from browning too rapidly.

1 c. butter
3 egg whites
Pinch salt
Flavoring—same as used in cake
Powdered sugar, about 5 cups, or enough to make the icing stand alone but be soft.

DANDELIONS CAN BE DESTROYED

For about "two-bits" in cash and a few minutes of "elbow grease," dandelions, long despised lawn weed, may be destroyed without harming the grass. Such is the encouraging information given out by Dr. L. H. Pammel, head of the Botany Department, Iowa State College.

Specifically, one spraying with a solution made up of about 2 pounds of iron sulfate per gallon of water, is sufficient to kill the young dandelion plants of a lawn without injuring the bluegrass or other lawn grass, according to Dr. Pammel. Iron sulfate sells for about 10 cents a pound and a gallon of the solution, containing 2 pounds of iron sulfate will cover about 100 square feet of lawn.

Where the dandelions are older and more firmly established, two or three sprayings may be needed, Dr. Pammel says. Where several sprayings are made, the grass may turn slightly brown, but it will not die.

Eighty acres of land four miles east of Waterloo on the Grant highway sold to investors in the last few months are being planted to asparagus, requiring two carloads or more than half a million asparagus plants.

Tile Homes are Not Expensive

A house built of Denison Mat faced tile costs no more than a frame house of same size and design after it is finished and painted. No paint is required for the tile house—its good looks last as long as the building. No lath—plaster is applied directly to tile and does not sweat, frost or crack.

The advantages of hollow tile construction are many. Five blankets of dead air keep out the cold and dampness in winter and the heat in summer. It saves on fuel. A hollow tile house is always more comfortable, more durable, better looking and has a higher resale value.

The Splinters

"Every Splinter Has A Point"

Vol. 2 Thursday, June 9, 1927 No. 8

Published in the Interests of the People of Belmond and Vicinity by the GREENLANDER LUMBER COMPANY.

A writer in one of our trade magazines wants to know if women are as smart as men. We have an opinion on that subject, but we're afraid to express it.

Small boy, coming back from garden where he was sent to find a switch.—"I couldn't find a switch, Mother, but here's a stone you can throw at me."

The flies, the flies, the pesky flies, they light upon your nose and eyes—but not if you have good screens. The fly season is just ahead. Better let us overhaul your old screens or make new ones.

We're convinced from the modern styles that quite a number of girl babies were allowed to walk too soon.

To get his wealth he spent his might and main,
And then with wealth,
He turned around and spent his wealth,
To get his health again.

Here's what you get with the American Steel Posts—you get our absolute guarantee that they will not burn, break, rot or frost heave in the fence line. Will replace any American Steel Post that doesn't do what we say it will do.

Husband— "What's he been up to now?"

The only two that can live as cheaply as one are a flea and a dog.

Lazy Employee — "Boss, I want to get off this afternoon to have my eyes examined."
Boss.—"All right, but have a good job done for you are going to be looking for work next week."

Can you imagine that some of our high school boys are out on the farm plowing corn?

Truth in Advertising

THIS advertising business is QUITE a study—in one of OUR trade journals this MONTH it tells about a FARMER who advertised a COW for sale like this: "THIS cow has an ornery DISPOSITION—she'll kick THE hat off your head AND chase you out of the LOT if she gets a chance, BUT she's there with the MILK flow if you're willing TO run the risk." AND the story goes on to SAY that the cow was SOLD by 9 o'clock the NEXT morning, all of which INDICATES that it pays to TELL the truth and while WE never chopped down any CHERRY trees, we do try TO tell the absolute truth ABOUT Dr. Hess' Stock TONIC and Panacea and if WE ever fail we want you to TELL us so.

THE success of the ton litter CLUBS in producing ton WEIGHTS in 180 days show THAT a new era in pork PRODUCTION is at hand. SPEED up—get into the TON litter class. A first REQUISITE is to keep pigs FREE from worms. A pig SIMPLY can not make large GAINS when he's full of WORMS. Dr. Hess' improved STOCK tonic drives out THE worms and keeps them OUT. It does it without INJURING pigs or checking THE growth. It's mineral CONTENT, calcium carbonate, CALCIUM phosphate and POTASSIUM iodide is a GREAT aid in bone and TISSUE building, and there's A lot of things it does but WE can't take space to tell ALL about it but we want YOU to come and let us TELL you what they are. DR. Hess Poultry panacea STARTS your chicks right, TOO, one pound to every 50 POUNDS of mash then you CAN forget your chick TROUBLES and start figuring PROFITS, so that's all for THIS week and be sure to TRY the Drug Store First!

For Camel is that kind of a smoke. Camel is all quality and no false front or show. Camels are made of the choicest Turkish and Domestic tobaccos grown—no substitutes. And the finest blending ever given a cigarette.

It is Camel character that has won the smokers of today—such honesty of taste and fragrance as never was known in a cigarette before. You'll find all dreams of smoking pleasure realized in this modern, quality cigarette.

Several formers in this vicinity are busy shelling corn.

Olaf Peterson took Gladys Peterson and Gladys Soma to Cedar Falls Tuesday, at which place they will attend summer school.

S. M. Stouffer, of Sac City, says that George C. Tucker, of Webster City, quotes Dr. Tien Lai Huang, a Chinese envoy who spoke in Webster City the other day, as saying that he never saw chop suey until he came to America and that he would prefer to see an American eat it rather than eat it himself. Bret Harte told us that "the Heathen Chinee is peculiar." Mr. Stouffer says that perhaps the chop suey joint is an invention of the thrifty oriental since he came to our shores. It has an appeal to the fellow who is willing to eat something "different" with unusual companions in a weird environment. Dr. Huang told a Des Mones audience that Americans accused the Chinese of eating rats "but here in America I understand you eat hot dog," he said. That would seem to leave the honors about even.

'No," replied the other, "my husband's. He had heard the noise, too."

News About Iowa People And Events

Recently the new coal chute erected by the Illinois Central at Denison at a cost of $45,000, was put into use for the first time. Denison was thereby made the only coaling station on the Illinois Central between Council Bluffs and Fort Dodge. The machinery of the new chute is operated by one man, where it required six in the old type chute. All operations are performed mechanically, the only duties of the operator being to keep the machinery oiled and in repair. The chute is 40x40 feet at the ground and is 104 feet high. It was constructed by the Robert Shaefer company of Chicago. Some 600 yards of concrete went into it, four carloads of cement being used. It is fireproof.

Thousands of Iowa farmers have worked on Sundays this spring in an effort to get the ground ready and the crops planted. It was a case of dire necessity and not a willful desecration of that sacred day. With improved farm equipment and plenty of power one man can now do as much work in a day as a half dozen could in days agone. For instance, a farmer in Madison county with the use of five horses and a 24-foot harrow went over a 70-acre field in two days. In many cases a harrow is fastened behind a three-bottom plowing equipment, drawn by a tractor, so adjusted as to plant for rows at a time, and drawn by four horses with a single driver have enabled one man to do the work of two in many fields. No genius has yet come upon the scene to perfect a corn planter that will drop corn automatically. The checkrower must yet be depended upon. Inventive skill could render agricultural Iowa a great service by constructing a self-dropping corn planter and an equipment that will bale straw as it come from the thresher.

On July 26 the Michigan tourist club will begin a three-thousand mile trek, starting from Battle Creek, under the guidance of James H. Brown, veteran motorist who has been conducting these pilgrimages for several years. It is expected that 50 automobiles will constitute the caravan. Last year the journey to the northwest was made over the Custer Battlefield Highway, that route being intercepted at Ames. This year Iowa will be entered at Dubuque over No. 5 and thence to Cedar Rapids and then to Des Moines, the southern terminus of the Custer Battlefield Highway. From Des Moines the route will be by the way of Fort Dodge, Storm Lake, Cherokee, Sioux Falls and Mitchell.

In order to preserve the fife and drum as dual inspirational music, Frank Anshutz, of Shenandoah, has presented the junior drum corps of Red Oak twelve nickle-plated metal fifes and the boys are enthusiastic to play the instrument. Mr. Anshtuz has looked for years with disfavor upon the tendency to permit the bugle to supplant the fife in drum corps organizations. Red Oak maintains one of the best equipped junior drum and bugle organizations in the state. Under the leadership of M. R. Hawkins it has furnished inspiration all over southwestern Iowa and eastern Nebraska. It received special commendation from President Coolidge because of its part in the big parade at the National Legion encampment in Omaha two years ago. The drum corps is composed of a group of boys who take pride both in their musical prowess and in their manly conduct. Mr. Hawkins has demonstrated what proper leadership can accomplish.

O. E. Smith, of Spirit Lake tells about the wonderful output at the fish hatchery up there. He says that over one hundred and forty million pike have beenhatched this season and distributed in the lakes. This is one of the biggest and most successful seasons the hatchery has ever enjoyed. The enlarging of the hatchery and the new ponds for the holding of the pike have made it possible to increase the hatch materially, and it is thought with much more fertility. Over the week-end the little twisters were coming out by the millions and had the employees on the run. All the lakes were given a good supply, as well as Center lake where a pike nursery has been established. In the cleaning of Center lake approximately 50,000 bull heads were taken out and distributed in outlying lakes and streams.

From Iowa points in 1926 various commodities to the value of $33,728,728 were exported. It is interesting to note what constituted the bulk of such outgoing shipments. Lard ranked first in order of value with $10,961,355 followed by hams and shoulders valued at $5,895,705; bacon, $5,507,458; agricultural machinery, $1,930,199; machinery, vehicles and parts, $1,090,550; and oats, meal and rolled oats, $1046,942. Fresh pork, pickled pork, canned meats, oleo oil, eggs, corn meal and flour, wheat flour, grains and flours, glucose and grape sugar cornstarch, textiles, wood and paper, were included in the commodities exported from the state during 1926.

Walter E. Williams, of Audubon, says that Nels Christensen, proprietor of the 1600 acre Christensen ranch north of this city returned last week from Texas with 800 choice Texas steers. He has 300 of these animals pastured on his ranch in this county, and the balance on pasture on the 1600 acre tract in Guthrie county, which he rents from H. A. Arnold of this city.

Winneshiek county in the month of April paid out $342.65 as bounties on wild animals, divided as follows: Five cub wolves, $20.00; 2356 pocket gophers, $235.60: 4 rattlesnakes, $2.00; 327 wood chucks, 49.05; 24 foxes, $36.00. In 1926 Butler county paid out $2,187 in bounties as follows: Wolves $10.00; gophers, $824.00; groundhogs, $1,099.25; crows $252.00. Butler is one of the few counties in the state that pays a bounty on crows, the law leaving it optional with boards of supervisors as to this. It is a mooted question as to whether crows do more harm than good. Taking the two counties cited above as an example thousands of dollars are paid out every year in this state for the suppression of animals and fowls that are harmful to crops. County agents in unison with the extension department at Ames can carry on eradication campaigns that would relieve the situation at by far less expense than the hap-hazard way in which matters are now conducted.

F. C. Upton, of Des Moines, representing the Chicago Joint Stock Land Bank, reports the sale of 200 acres of land in Humboldt county to Edward Haddad, an Asyrian peddler who drives a two horse wagon out of Fort Dodge. Three years ago Mr. Haddad purchased a farm of 140 acres in Webster county. The recent purchase of 200 acres cost $140 an acre and the peddler had the cash to pay for it. He lives at the Duncombe hotel in Fort Dodge. He has built up a prosperous business out over the country in the vicinity of Fort Dodge and the fact that he has accumulated 340 acres of choice Iowa land is evidence that he saves what he earns.

M. A. Hauser of Marshalltown, extension service farm crops man, says that fifteen counties shipped in 750 cars of alfalfa hay this past season, averaging fourteen tons to the car, costing an average of $25 per ton. That means that the fifteen counties spent $262,000 or $17,500 each for the legume hay shipped in from other states, and yet Iowa soil, properly limed and inoculated, will grow three or four crops of this wonderful legume of an average season.

Recently Schori Bros. of Elgin turned sixty hogs out in pasture. After a couple of days they noticed the hogs traveling in circles, staggering, and altogether acting very queerly. The hogs were intoxicated. At first it was thought there might be a still hidden around somewhere or the water had become contaminated by bootlegger's mash, but it was discovered that the hogs were rooting up and eating some sort of root, belonging to the Maywood family, which was causing them to lose their equilibrium. They had to take some of the hogs home in a wagon but none died.

About $1,700,000 is to be invested by the Iowa Bonus board, it is announced by R. J. Laird, member of the board. The money is left from the bonus fund, and will be invested in Iowa bonus bonds. April first, when the payment of bonus claims ceased, it was found that $1,700,000 was left from the original bond sale of $22,000,000. Interest on the invested money will be spent for disabled veterans who are residents of Iowa, and who were qualified for the bonus. There will be no interest before January 1.

A lively contest is on in an effort to reach the largest membership in the American Legion. The contest is predicated upon the percent of World War veterans to the population of the city or town. Just now rivalry between Des Moines and Sioux City is intense. Des Moines has 6,500 World War veterans, but not nearly all of such belong to the Legion. To enroll the largest percent of available material is the point involved in the contest. The middle of August will close the issue.

"And the wedding?" Ethel's questing eyes lifted to his.

"Poor dear! I wouldn't have the heart to take you up there. It would be unthinkable." He gravely shook his head.

"Up where?" She turned on him—fear in her eyes. "You can live out of doors here?"

"I can't loaf here—I must do something. And a friend has offered me the chance of air—and work, too. Up on James bay. I've been offered a job with the Hudson's Bay company."

Had Guthrie's announced destination been China, the shock could not have been more profound to his hearers. The plump face of his brother darkened in a scowl of frank disapproval. Clara sat open-mouthed, incredulous. Ethel probed Garth's level eyes, as if in doubt of his meaning—then, chin in hands, stared dully at the tablecloth.

"You bound yourself," she said at length, in a voice empty of emotion. "You planned all this—to go away for a year—without consulting me— I don't seem to count, then." Rising stiffly, she had left the room, followed by the sympathetic Clara.

Yes, it had been brutally abrupt—unfeeling, admitted the man lying by his sleeping dog, as the storm drove past the tent in the alders. But the alternative would have been endless letters of protest, reproach, so he had not written. Through the slow months of the winter, with their loneliness and introspection, he had learned to doubt both himself and Ethel. Often in the intervals between her visits with Clara—Charles had been too busy to appear more than once—Garth had desperately tried to analyze the nature of her affection; often, in his doubt of her, fought to free himself from the magic of her hold over him; always, in the end, to realize how he was missing her—how hungrily he waited for her coming. No, the separation had not broken the spell or lessened his need of her, but it had touched his enamored eyes with vision. There in the white hills of his banishment, beyond the glamor of her physical loveliness, he had learned to see how utterly she had failed him. Hurt in body, disillusioned, he had returned from the holocaust of Flanders to the refuge of her arms—the solace of her love—to find regret—a veiled shrinking from the change in him; to learn that she still clung to her memories of the boy with unmarred face who had carried away her heart into the maelstrom of the final years of the war.

He pictured the scene at the Victoria station. Old comrades—fellow officers, there with their Godspeed, chatting in a group, nearby, while he talked with family.

"To think that I can hear from you so seldom—that is what makes it so hard," Ethel was saying.

With a thrust of the old pain he remembered that the girl whose face bore the unmistakable marks of suffering even at parting, had, from habit, stood on his left side. A year had failed to reconcile her. The furrowed cheek was still a thing hideous.

"It is tough. There's only the Christmas mail and a summer packet up the coast from Albany," he had replied, "but there's always the chance of a canoe or dog-team being sent through between times. So write regularly and I'll get them in time. In France I'd often get five or six at once—and read them in their order."

"Oh, you mustn't expect the letters I used to write, Garth," she had swiftly replied.

"No," he said grimly, "I've learned not to expect that."

"You know why."

"Yes, I think I know why." They stood, avoiding each other's eyes, in their unvoiced misery.

The train was about to start. A wave to his friends; a grip of the hand for Charles; a hug for the teary Clara; and he turned to the dry-eyed girl. "Good-by, dear. A year is not so long." He took her in his arms and kissed her. But the face he touched was cold. Her arms hung stiff at her side. "Good-by, Ethel," he repeated. "I'm sorry."

"Good-by, Garth," she faltered. "This, I suppose, is the end—I've lost you."

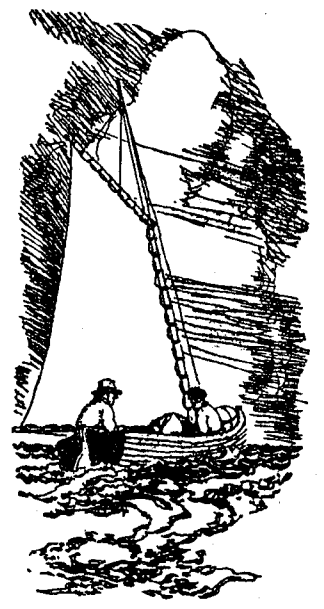
* * * * * * * *

Down the Missinaibi to Moose, up the coast to Fort Albany, the man who had gone into the north to find health and the solution of his problem in separation, was companioned by doubt and self-censure. It had been unfair—brutal—this wrenching himself from the sure appeal of her personal charm. But in fairness to the future, it was imperative. A year would clarify his vision—prove her hold over him unbearable or make him a free man. However, notwithstanding the bitterness of her farewell, the first mail to reach him in the early months of his apprenticeship in the fur trade had brought letters patently not those of renunciation. On the contrary they dwelt in detail on plans for his future homecoming and the wedding; were gay with gossip; related with frank pride the rumor of a knighthood for services to the government during the war with which the name of Charles Guthrie was being coupled; at times, to his surprise, approached the warmth of the old days.

In the autumn Garth had been sent north with Etienne Savanne, a veteran servant of the company, to winter at the fur post at the mouth of the Elkwan. When the Christmas mail from Albany was sighted on the white river trail, the mingled feelings with which Guthrie watched the approach of the dog-team bringing word from home—from her—were the cause of puzzled self-analysis through the months to follow. In July when he sailed into Fort Albany in his York boat with his fur packs, his year on the silent west coast was up. The mail he found waiting his arrival brought the news that he was now brother of Sir Charles Guthrie; announced the decision of Ethel and Clara for an August wedding on the return of the exile; dwelt at length on the rise in Guthrie steel; and disposed of his health in the casual surmise that it had been fully restored by the year in the open.

The last had drawn a bitter smile from the man who read. Pages for the personal affairs of the writers, and a line for the lungs he had brought back from the Hun drive for the Channel ports. So they were waiting in Montreal, were they, for his return, to bend him to their petty ways—shape him into a business machine, like Charlie—when he had breathed the stinging air off the ice-fields of the bay; seen the caribou drift across nameless lakes at dawn; camped under a canopy of stars while the aurora blazoned the north; wakened to the raucous chorus of the Canadas and watched the "wavies" rally their legions in the autumn? How blurred, after this, the once poignant memory of Ethel Falconer was growing! How petty seemed the obsession of Charles Guthrie for money and power to the man who had found in the peace of the west coast an opiate for his doubt and disillusion!

With no attempt at defense of his decision to remain for another year Guthrie wrote home, and without regret, had sailed out of the delta of the great Albany with Etienne, bound for Elkwan.



Sailed Out of the Delta of the Great Albany.

The man who had lain beside his sleeping dog with his thoughts while the wind roared through the alders, hammering the anchored tent, and the rain beat its intermittent tattoo, sat up, and placing the candle lantern at his elbow, drew a letter from his pocket and read:

"Dearest Garth:

"I don't know what to say—I'm simply stunned. Either you are still ill—are deceiving us, or take this method to humiliate me before your family and the world in the hope that I shall voluntarily give you up. Of course, if you no longer love me, there is nothing to be said. Do you love me still, Garth dear? So long as you do, I shall wait.

"Devotedly—until you wish it otherwise, ETHEL."

This had been her answer to the burning of his bridges—utter abandonment of her pride, and he had once thought her proud.

Nevertheless, each new reading of the letter brought to Elkwan by the fall packet a fortnight before, had quickened the memory of what this girl, vibrant with life and physical charm, had meant to him—this girl whom he had humiliated. Often, standing before her vivid likeness in his quarters he had gazed at the alluring face, the faultless modeling of neck and shoulders, and marveled at the spell which held him in the north while such loveliness waited his return. She still had power to stir him, but his moods of self-censure and remorse were short-lived. The north had won.

CHAPTER II

At daylight the challenge of the airedale waked the sleeping man. With hair erect on mane and back, the dog squeezed through the lashed tent flap to break into furious barking.

"Shut up, Shot! Etienne's dropped in for breakfast," called Guthrie.

"Good morning, Etienne! You had a bad night of it in the bush."

The wiry half-breed cached his load on the platform above his head, and grinned. "I mak good camp een de spruce wid beeg fire, an' roast some goose."

With difficulty the men boiled their tea and a kettle of goose; then, to avoid the flying sand, went into the tent to eat.

"We ought to be starting for Elkwan, Etienne. I don't like to leave her too long, sick as she is."

The swart face of Etienne Savanne grew grave as he nodded.

"She nevaire see de snow once more."

"That's why I hate to leave her alone with old Anne. I'd never forgive myself if—" Guthrie paused to stare at the tent wall.

The black eyes of his companion softened. "You ben good man, m'sieu'. Dat girl die long ago een de bush."

"Yes, the condensed milk has kept her alive—but she should have gone to the mission at Albany."

The other shook his head; then struck a match and lit his pipe before replying.

"You are new man in dees countree. You don' know Injun squaw. At Albanee—widout you—she not be happy."

Guthrie reddened under his deep tan. He knew only too well. "But they would have taken better care of her," he protested.

All day while the norther flayed the west coast, Guthrie and Etienne dressed and salted geese. Deep in the winter, when the caribou had drifted back from the coast, the geese, freed from the salt by boiling, would be a welcome change from the fat bacon of the company's stores. The wind held into the night, but when the men turned out of their blankets at sunrise the blow was over.

At noon the goose hunters launched the canoe and driving her through a quarter sea, pushed down the coast for the shelter of Akimiski island. They were rounding the low headland of Elkwan point when Garth, slaving in the bow, was aroused by an exclamation from the stern man.

"Look! A boat!" Etienne pointed his dripping paddle across the yellow strait to the shore of the island. "Shipwrecked—somewhere! Dey use de oar."

In the distance, crossing to the mainland, Guthrie made out a boat.

From the craft, still miles away, showed a flutter of white.

"We'll come up with them on the lee side of the point," and Guthrie, whose thoughts were at Elkwan, whose arms were driven by fear—fear that in his absence tragedy had had its grim way, lunged viciously with his paddle.

In the quiet waters beyond Elkwan point, the two boats approached within hailing distance. In the ship's dory four men were rowing, while two figures sat in the stern. The crew of the boat rested on their oars.

"Hello, canoe!"

Guthrie answered the hail, and shortly the Peterboro came up with the larger craft. "You've lost your ship?" he began.

The black-bearded figure in the stern of the boat, ignoring the question, demanded: "You're Hudson's Bay people?"

"Yes, we're bound to the Elkwan just below here. You've lost your ship? Where did you leave her?"

Guthrie's curious glance shifted from the bearded spokesman to the girl at his side wearing a pea-jacket and a sou'wester, below the brim of which fluttered a plume of dark hair. As the boats swung together, the airedale, mane and tale stiff, growled menacingly at the strangers, but a low command from his master silenced him.

"Our schooner's ashore on the outside of the island. We left Fort George day before yesterday, and were off Cape Jones when the blow struck us. It crippled our rudder and drove us straight across the bay. We couldn't head into it."

"You were lucky to get ashore in that blow," said the surprised Guthrie. "Your boat must have got a pounding on those flats."

"It did, but we struck at high tide and managed to get most of our stuff off her. Then, this morning, we fell into the hands of a pirate."

"Pirate!" Guthrie exclaimed.

"Oh, Archie," protested the girl, "that's hardly fair. He paid for what he took, and helped with the last of the stores."

"Who were they—where from?"

"They were in a little sixty-foot power schooner, the Ghost, St. Johns, and the leader was a red-headed ruffian with a mutilated face—horrible!"

The black eyes of Etienne Savanne snapped as they met the backward glance of his chief. "McDonal', Ha! Ha!" said the half-breed with a grin that mapped his swart face with lines.

"What?"

"Yes," nodded Guthrie. "Your pirate was undoubtedly the famous Laughing McDonald. The Indians call him 'McDonald Ha! Ha!' because of the grin—from that scar."

As he spoke, Guthrie was aware that the grave eyes of the girl were curiously studying him—the second man with a scarred face she had met since her shipwreck on the west coast. Instinctively he got the impression that those sober eyes had themselves looked on suffering—tragedy. The blood rose to his forehead as he went on: "They think he's sort of a superman—the Indians. He's hypnotized them; but," and he met the girl's straight look, "you say he treated you fairly?"

"I think he did," she said, and, as she tucked the loose lock of chestnut under her cap, while the color showed faintly at her temples, he wondered if she had read his thoughts.

"Treated us fairly," exploded the bearded man. "Well, I call that—"

"How many men were with him?" roughly interrupted Guthrie.

"Four. There was an Eskimo, too."

"One a big, bearded chap?"

"Yes! The others I took to be sailors."

Guthrie nodded to Savanne. "That's the Newfoundland whaler who brought him into the bay last year," he said; then continued to the stranger, "You had the honor, sir, to meet the man who has stampeded the fur trade from Whale river to Fort Churchill. He took fifty thousand dollars' worth of fox out of the bay last year."

"Hum! Why didn't you drive him out—arrest him?"

Guthrie laughed. "Arrest him for what? He has as much right here as we. Then, you know, there are not many who would relish the job."

"Relish the job! Bah! I thought you fur men were—"

The speaker was interrupted by a voice suddenly grown hard with impatience. "It's getting late. My name is Guthrie—this is my assistant. Etienne Savanne. You'd better step that mast. You'll need the sail or you won't make Elkwan before dark."

"I'm Dr. Archibald Quarrier, sir, geologist. We've been prospecting for iron and copper on the east coast," snapped the other, visibly annoyed. "This is my sister, Miss Joan Quarrier. How far did you say we were from Albany?"

Guthrie smiled into the amused eyes of the girl, who seemed to enjoy the discomfiture of her brother.

"You're ninety miles from Albany. Your boat can't be beached like a canoe. It would depend on the wind." Then, as he glanced at the sun, dread of what he might find at Elkwan led Guthrie to finish abruptly: "Follow me into the river mouth. Our accommodations are limited, but you are welcome." And delivered of this lie, with a sweep of his paddle, he separated the boats.

"How about my stuff over on the island; it's very valuable?" called Quarrier after the retreating canoe. "You can send men for that and bring it to Albany?"

But the paddles of the now fast-moving Peterboro lunged and swung in unison, the question ignored.

Beyond the river valley the muskeg was smothering a sun veiled in haze when the Peterboro approached the log landing below the huddle of buildings on the high shore, which was Elkwan. The problem of caring for the guests which the storm had brought Guthrie had been swiftly crowded from his thoughts by solicitude for those he had left at the post, a week before, when the necessity for beginning the hunt of their winter supply of geese had compelled his absence. He was overdue, and Anne was old and ignorant. He would never forgive himself—never cease to be haunted by the eyes of the doomed girl he had left in the care of the Cree women, if— But no! It was unthinkable—too hideously tragic that it should have come to her, alone with old Anne. Fear of the thing had depressed him on his summer trip to Albany—had harassed him through the last two days, a prisoner to the wind. The ache of his own loneliness through the first weeks at the sanatorium had lent him deeper understanding of the frightened look in the eyes of the girl whenever of necessity he had left her, even for a few hours, in the care of old Anne. But always he had returned to find her, and the joy in her wistful face had been fit recompense for his haste to turn back—to keep his word to a waif of a half-breed, that he would be with her at the end.

Guthrie leaped up the cliff trail to his quarters. Opening the door, he announced his coming in a voice that belied his fear.

"Back again! How's all my family?"

A squat Indian woman shuffled into the living room, her wide mouth splitting a swarthy face in a grin of delight.

"'Allo! We glad you come!"

Guthrie expelled a deep breath of relief. A voice from an adjacent room called faintly:

"Nia! nia! You come back! It ees long tam!"

"Yes, Ninda." He bent over the cot where lay the wraith of a girl in whose face, thin to emaciation, great dark eyes glowed feverishly as she smiled up to him in her joy.

Guthrie drew a chair to the bedside and took in his the hot hand which lay on the coverlet. The fever was worse.

"It was the storm, Ninda—the wind. We could not travel."

The blue-black hair, heaped in braids on the pillow, accentuated the pallor of the dusky skin, shot over the high cheek bones with the flush of fever. She had failed rapidly since he left, but in her hour of extremity she would not be alone.

He shook his head. No more, Ninda."

Anne came in with some hot condensed milk. The girl sipped a little, then smiled at the pitying face of the man with its scar furrowing the right cheek.

"You here all tam now, Ninda sleep." With a sigh her eyes closed. As Guthrie left the room, he looked back. On the pinched oval of her face hovered a smile.

"Where the boat, Etienne?" he asked, huskily, entering the trade-house, which stood in the clearing outside the dog stockade.

"She come slow along the shore—not far now."

Guthrie went down to the landing to meet his guests. The lack of space at his quarters—at first thought embarrassing—was now a source of satisfaction, for there would be room for Miss Quarrier, only. Her pompous brother and the rest would sleep in the trade-house. He would take Quarrier in to meals and the others could eat with Etienne.

And then, there was Ninda.

Guthrie fiercely resented the presence of the people whose boat was slowly approaching the landing. Why had they been sent him at this time—these strangers? This bearded ass of a geologist would spread himself all over the place, demanding attention; would doubtless ask him to go to Akimiski and save the stuff salvaged on the beach. Well, he would pack them off to Albany at once. But the sister seemed a different sort—nice eyes she had, straight, direct, but something sad about them; a sense of humor, too, for she laughed flat in Quarrier's face at the McDonald story. So the free-trader was in the bay still? Strange, that! Did he mean to winter there? If he did, it would cut into the Christmas trade in foxes—would be bad for Elkwan. Daring chap, this McDonald. Who was he, anyhow?

The arrival of the boat cut short his rumination.

"I see you brought plenty of food," commented the factor with a smile, as the sailors, under the direction of Etienne, began unloading boxes from the heavily freighted craft.

Why Had They Been Sent Him at This Time?

"Yes, we didn't want to run short before reaching Fort Albany," replied Quarrier.

"But the excess weight will bother you on these tide-flats." Then he continued, "Doctor, I regret that I shall have to put you in the trade-house with your men. I have a spare bedroom for Miss Quarrie. You will eat at my quarters, of course."

"Oh, we don't expect much at a small trading post, Mr. Guthrie," replied Quarrier, magnanimously. "If you can make my sister comfortable, it's perfectly satisfactory."

The girl laughed. "As sister has put up for three months with a most uncomfortable two-by-five berth on a wobbly schooner, Mr. Guthrie," she said, "I know I shall revel in your hospitality."

She had shed her coat and sou'wester and Guthrie's eyes measured her with a quick glance. Taller, he thought, than she seemed in the boat, and cleanly made. The eyes which had seemed black, he saw were brown. Young, too, she was; much younger than her brother, and what hair!

As he led the way across the clearing he wondered how the presence of this white woman would affect the girl with the dark skin who was slowly coughing her life away. He found himself embarrassed—at a loss for an explanation of the situation to his guest.

"Miss Quarrier," he forced himself to begin, "we have a very sick girl in the house—it is unfortunate we are so crowded, but I have no other room. I'm giving you mine."

He had stopped as he spoke, and stared down at his moccasins; then continued, while her questioning eyes studied his face.

"She came here at the spring trade—very sick—would have flickered out in weeks without proper food. Old Anne and I have done our best, but canned milk and broth are all we had for her. And now it may be any day—I was terribly anxious about her—to get home. You noticed it—when we met you?"

"Yes, I noticed it," replied the girl, "I knew you were worried about something. I'm so sorry, Mr. Guthrie. We shall be a great burden at such a time."

"No, it's not that. I have room for you, and the others don't matter. But it will be unpleasant for you—in the house."

Miss Quarrier straightened, threw back her head and held his embarrassed glance as she quietly said:

"Would it help you to know that I was a nurse overseas through the last three years of the war?"

He went red under the deep tan. She would not mind Ninda, then—she, to whom agony and death had been commonplaces.

"I am glad—you will understand. You see—she, somehow, wants me with her at the end—fears I'll not be there. I've promised her."

"I know. I will help you."

* * * * * * * * *

Under a sky flushed with the rose of the northern twilight, Joan Quarrier and her brother stood on the high shore of the Elkwan, whose flat surface caught and held the warm tones of the heavens. On guard before the factor's house, inside the stockade, lay the great airedale, satisfied, since his introduction, that these people were at Elkwan with the consent of his master, but nursing, nevertheless, a deep dislike of the man with hairy face, who had dared attempt to rub the ears of the former mascot of the First battalion, Royal Montreals.

"So there's a dying Indian woman at the house?" Quarrier was saying.

"Yes. He asked me to see her. She has a frightful pulse and temperature. It's a matter of days—hours, I should think."

"Matter of squaw-man, also," sniffed Quarrier.

The girl's straight brows contracted with irritation. "No, I don't think so. It's a matter of big heart. Old Anne, the Cree cook, found her sick in a tipi, when the Indians were here in June for the trade. Out of sheer humanity, they took care of her."

"You believe that story?" scoffed the man of science.

The eyes of the girl hardened. "Well, Mr. Grundy, it's none of your business or mine, is it?"

"I should distinctly say it was my business—to have my sister, without so much as an apology to me, sharing his house with his—squaw," protested Quarrier in tones of outraged dignity.

"Very well. How would you like to have me sleep with you and the men in the trade-house? He's given me his room. What more could he do? And I'd advise you as a guest of Mr. Guthrie to be careful what you say. Did you notice his face?"

"You mean the scar?"

"No, I mean the mouth and the eye."

"What about them?"

"Just this, blind man. I'd feel very sorry for the person who was the cause of Mr. Guthrie losing his temper. Whether it's pity or affection, I don't know, but rather than have the last hours of this poor child disturbed, he'd throw you into the river and the rest of us with you."

"Nonsense. I'll report him to his superiors at Albany if he comes any high-handed business with me."

"Arch," she taunted, "you know that you're really a bit timid, underneath." The man flushed angrily and started to reply, but the girl stopped him with her raised hand. "You were pretty scared when that blow struck us—rather lost your head, brother." Then she said, soberly: "I advise you to be very careful how you bluster to the factor of Elkwan."

Guthrie appeared at the door of his house and called them in to supper. As Dr. Archibald Quarrier followed his sister into the living room where the table had been set for three, little in its meager furnishings escaped his roving eyes.

"We are very primitive here, you see," Guthrie said as he watched the geologist's minute inspection of his quarters, which terminated at the bookshelves. "And I cannot guarantee Anne's bread, it varies, but her caribou stew and broiled whitefish I hope you will like."

"My brother, as a scientist, Mr. Guthrie, is nothing if not thorough in his inspections," apologized Joan Quarrier with a grimace which failed to conceal from her host her embarrassment. "And I shall revel in your whitefish."

Quarrier turned petulantly. "There you go again, Joan, always making remarks at my expense," then addressed Guthrie. "I see from your books that you are not interested in science."

With a significant glance at the girl, Guthrie soberly answered: "No, I fear I haven't the scientific mind. I waste my time up here reading fiction and history—poetry, too."

"Poetry?" With silent deprecation, Quarrier shook his head as he took the chair Gordon offered at the table.

DYER COMPANY FORECLOSES MORTGAGE ON IOWA VALLEY SUGAR COMPANY

Plant Will Be Sold Some Day Next Month

Foreclosure Hearing Is Held At Fort Dodge, Tuesday, In Federal Court

WILL BE SOLD IN JULY

The fate of the Belmond sugar mill went into the hands of the law Tuesday, when a hearing was held in federal court at Fort Dodge on the foreclosure of the mortgage held by the Dyer Construction Co., who built the plant.

A. L. Luick and V. F. Mikesell of the company were in attendance at the hearing. No contest was made, on the part of the Iowa Valley Sugar Co., Mr. Luick and Mr. Mikesell being there primarily to protect the interests of the Iowa Valley Operating Co. Decree went to the judge yesterday, Wednesday, and he will set a day for sale of the plant, probably one month from the day, which would be about July 15. On that day the factory will be sold to the highest bidder to satisfy the mortgage held by the Dyer Company, and to cover all costs of same. The mortgage is for $500,000, which with the costs will run the total figure up to about $560,000.

It is likely that the Dyer Company will bid the plant in. The purchaser will have the right to file before December 1 this year, an intention to operate the mill in 1928. It is reported there is a possibility of this being done, and if so Belmond will universally hope that it is done, and the factory is operated.

The Iowa Valley Sugar Co. will have a year, according to the law, in which to redeem the property.

GETS CARLOAD OF SEPARATORS

Cato C. Griesy received a shipment of a solid carload of McCormick-Deering Primrose cream separators, Monday. The carload consisted of 120 separators—enough, the average person would think, to supply all of Wright county and part of Franklin and Hancock. Mr. Griesy has been selling separators, however, the past couple weeks faster than he could deliver them, and says he expects to sell the entire carload. At this writing, he has sold 24 separators within the past two weeks, and at that rate his carload will soon be gone. Selling cream separators seems to be somewhat like selling new cars—you have to trade more or less. When you buy a new car you trade in the old one, and evidently the farmers trade in their old separator to judge from the line-up of used machines in the Griesy store; he has a room full of them. Some of them are practically new machines, their owners having been convinced of the superior qualities of the Primrose over the make they were using. One of the separators Mr. Griesy received in trade for a new Primrose, had only been used two weeks. Cato has been hitting the separator sales hard, and his red truck is in the country most of the time delivering new machines.

NISSEN & McNAMARA BUY MEAT MARKET AT GARNER

Leo McNamara and Martin Nissen, one of the Nissen Brothers firm, have bought the Garner Meat Market and took possession last week. Leo has been in charge of this market since the Nissen Brothers opened the place a year and a half ago. Martin Nissen has been at the Belmond shop for several years. He has come here, and will move his family here later. Leo is one of the most obliging young men the town has ever had and the business has grown under his supervision until it is one of the good businesses of Garner. He has demonstrated what service will accomplish and has made a success of a business that several had given up as a poor proposition.—Garner Signal.

HERMAN BERGHEFER

Herman Berghefer, son of John Berghefer, was born January 22, 1886, in LaSalle county, Illinois. He was baptized in infancy in the Evangelical Lutheran church. He died on the eighth day of June, 1927, in the state institution for the crippled, at Glenwood, Iowa. In the year 1895 he came with his parents to Iowa, where the family settled on a farm near Galt. In 1905 they moved to the vicinity of Belmond, and in 1910 to Coulter. At the age of sixteen he was stricken with infantile paralysis, which left him a cripple for life. In 1922 he was taken to the institution at Glenwood, Iowa. Death came suddenly, being caused by cerebral hemorrhage. He attained the age of forty-one years, four months and sixteen days.

His mother preceded him to eternity in 1914, and a brother in 1902. He leaves behind, his father, John Berghefer, and his stepmother, Mrs. John Berghefer of Peru, Illinois; four brothers, John of Belmond, Henry of Dows, Adam of Peru, Ill., and Carl of near Coulter; three sisters, Elizabeth Friesleben of Alexander, Goldie Jackson of Clarion, and Laura Hicks of near Latimer; and many other relatives and friends.

Funeral services were held Friday, June 10, at St. John's Evangelical Lutheran church in Belmond, the pastor, Rev. J. F. Wipperman, officiating. Burial was in Franklin Grove cemetery. Out of town relatives attending the funeral were Mr. and Mrs. John Berghefer and Adam Berghefer, of Peru, Ill.

AUTO TANGLE AT CLARION

Monitor: Two automobiles went to the garage after a collision last Thursday afternoon at the corner near the Cramer flats when a heavy touring car driven by Chas. Hauge and a light touring driven by Mrs. Curtis Corwin failed to slow down as quickly as either driver had expected they would. Hauge, a farmer living northwest of Belmond, was coming from the north, and Mrs. Corwin was going from town to the Great Western station. Her car was skidded a short distance at the intersection by force of the impact, and the windshield was broken. A sister of Mrs. Corwin suffered a cut on the head and a baby with them was cut on the throat, so close to a dangerous area that they are feeling fortunate it was not more serious.

Thompson Brought To Grand Jury

Former Eagle Grove Cashier Is Questioned By Court

The grand jury met Monday in response to the call and is hearing the testimony of many witnesses There is no announcement made as yet of the results of their hearings.

Failure to pay interest due March 30 has caused Citizens State Bank of Eagle Grove to ask judgment against Frank McDaniels, guardian, and his ward, B. F. McDaniels, with foreclosure of a junior mortgage on land in Dayton township. The note does not fall due until March 30, 1928.

Cole Bros. of Eagle Grove ask judgment against K. C. Benns for $75.83 for groceries bought while defendants operated the Quality cafe. Another judgment against the same defendants is asked by J. H. Martin & Sons for $113.35. It is alleged that defendants are now non residents of this state.

Equitable Life Assurance company of New York seek judgment against E. M. Smith and Mary E. Smith for $5,275 to cover a loan made on land in Boone township, asking also that a receiver be appointed to manage the property, and apply the returns. State Bank of Renwick, Whyte & Son and C. A. Packard are made defendants in this action because each holds some claims against defendant Smith, who it is alleged, is insolvent.

Mrs. Guy Moore, now living in Ft. Madison, has been cited to appear before the court June 18 for questioning concerning her fitness to care for a son and a daughter by a former marriage. The two children are now living with their grandmother, Mrs. Alice McBurney, at Dows.

The defunct Citizens State Bank of Eagle Grove is asking judgment against George H. Martin for $12,388.07 on two promissory notes. In a second action judgment is asked against George H. Martin and Blanche F. Martin for recovery on an $8,000 note through foreclosure of a junior mortgage on land in section 8, Woolstock township. Because Martin has not paid interest on the first mortgage plaintiffs ask appointment of a receiver to collect and apply rentals and profits.

E. J. Thompson, formerly cashier of the Citizens State bank of Eagle Grove, was brought to Clarion the first of the week from Fort Madison by Sheriff Johnson. His presence was desired in district court matters.—Monitor.

Tells Origin Of 4-H Club Emblem

O. H. Benson, Former County Superintendent, Tells Story

In a recent issue of Hoard's Dairyman, O. H. Benson, a former county superintendent of Wright county, tells of the origin of the 4-H club emblem. The story is that during recess one June morning some 20 odd years ago, at a Wright county rural school, Mr. Benson drove up as the 11 pupils of the school were picking four leaf clovers in a nearby field. At the teacher's suggestion, the pupils made a bouquet of four leave clovers and gave it to him. Mr. Benson says:

"The teacher rang the bell and the pupils took their seats. I followed, bearing with me the handful of good luck. Just before closing for the noon hour, the teacher asked me if I didn't have a message for the school.

"Holding my bouquet up before the pupils I told them I had been looking for an emblem for the agricultural clubs and the schools of the county and they had given it to me.

"So out of the hearts, hands and needs of these farm children was born this significant 4-H emblem, which bears so effectively for old and young the message of a four square education."

Dr. R. L. Nelson, of Belmond, has received an invitation to attend a unique reunion of his osteopathic college class on Pike's Peak on July 30.

This reunion is to be one of the social features in connection with the International osteopathic convention which will meet in Denver the last week of July.

Dr. Nelson graduated from the Des Moines Still College of Osteopathy in 1926.

J. E. Alford, of Des Moines, while driving an automobile along the highway near Webster City the other day saw a flock of prairie chickens which he estimated as containing from 75 to 100 birds. He says it reminded him of the days when there were millions of these attractive wild fowls on the prairies of Iowa. J. H. Bunter states that while driving through Grundy county recently he saw hundreds of Chinese pheasants, the bird that has been propagated to take the place of the prairie chicken so nearly extinct.

Waterloo Tribune: If Hughes is too old, Lowden is. Lowden is 66 and isn't registering any objection to his age. But Lowden looks strong and healthy. See him in pictures around his farm and astride a steed and he looks like a man who could hold the presidency for two terms and not move off to senile decay. It depends a whole lot on the man.

SOUSA AND HIS BAND TO BE AT STATE FAIR

John Phillip Sousa, the world's most famous band director and composer, has signed a contract to come to Iowa this summer for seven days and nights of the Iowa State Fair and Exposition, August 24 to September 2.

He will bring with him his internationally-known concert band of seventy pieces, and in addition a number of special soloists. From August 27 through September 2 he will play three concerts daily at the fair, one in the morning, one in the afternoon and a third in the evening. On Sunday, August 28, he will present two special concerts in front of the amphitheatre—one in the afternoon and one in the evening.

This is the first time in history that Sousa has played for a State Exposition in this country, and he rescinded a life-time policy in signing his contract to come to the Iowa State Fair this summer.

Secretary A. R. Corey announced that full details of the general entertainment program for the big exposition were almost completed. Thus far the program includes five days of horse racing, two days of auto races, whippet dog races on seven days, six bands and orchestras thruout the period of the fair, a big, night fireworks spectacle four nights of society horse shows, fifteen hippodrome and circus attractions, and numerous other features calculated to appeal to every age and every taste.

The addition of the new grand stand, now being constructed, is expected to add greatly to the afternoon and evening attendance.

Probably never before in the history of the world has any private citizen been accorded the universal acclaim and honors that have been extended Charles Lindberg during the past four weeks. He has become the idol of every country, of every race, regardless of color or of conditions. One must grant that he has performed an amazing feat in crossing the Atlantic by airship, and in doing it alone he appealed in the first place to the innate imagination and love of courage in us all. Perhaps that was primarily the thing that appealed, that and the fact that he accomplished something no one had ever been able to do before. His flying over 3,600 miles alone, across long, dangerous stretches of isolated water, stirred the enthusiasm of people. It was typically American in its inception and conclusion. It was truly a wonderful, amazing and courageous performance. Naturally, we in America would be proud of it and of Lindberg. But the glory of his flight has faded into the background before the character that he has displayed in receiving all the glory and honors that have been showered upon him by all nations. We are far more proud of Lindberg as a man and an American than we are of the great feat he accomplished. Lindberg has demonstrated himself to be the kind of an American we like to think we are. Honors and glory untold have not turned his head in the least. Regardless of where he has been or what has been given him by a wildly enthusiastic nation or nations, he has remained the same modest, unassuming, kindly, friendly American boy he was before. He has shown an uncanny ability to say and do the right thing at the right time, to wear the right clothes and right bearing no matter what the occasion or stress or pressure. Money has not tempted him; glory has not turned him; honors have not broken him. His cheerful grin has been as ready to flash out for the street urchin as for the king. And in those things, in the character of the boy—for he is only 25—the world is paying more homage than in the feat he performed. Lindberg has given the people of Europe a better insight into the real American character, the real American people, than all the tourists, all the diplomats and all the documents America has ever sent overseas. Lindberg is an honest-to-God American, a real American, and as that more than as a flying hero he is receiving, justly, all the honors a grateful, appreciative people can give. We are proud that an American performed this great feat, but we are prouder still that it was the kind of an American that Lindberg is who performed it.

Dows Advocate: The Editor is always reluctant in placing editorial matter on the front page of the Advocate, but certain conditions exist in Dows that not only imperils every property holder and business man but the very existence of the town and should receive the careful attention and consideration of every fair minded citizen.

We are referring to deplorable conditions of letting the petty jealously and antagonism of a few sway the destiny of the whole. This unhealthy condition will sap the vitality of any small town. In fact it is a disease that will kill any town and the one that has held Dows down in the past and if permitted to continue will eventually reduce our fair town to waving fields of oats and corn.

In 1920 Dows numbered 1145, the census enumerator gave it 1,014 in 1925, a drop of 131 in five years. Only one house has been built in Dows in that period and that is under construction now. Many good homes have been sold for half of what it would cost to replace them and the business property has suffered in proportion. Every property holder of five years ago has had to take this loss, and every property holder today will suffer a like loss in the next five years if these conditions are permitted to exist, as they are becoming unbearable. Right now one of our substantial business houses is considering quitting because of this condition, and another renewed their lease the past week reluctantly and against their best judgment, as they could see no prospects for any improvement.

ANALYSIS OF DIVORCES IN IOWA IN 1925

Mr. R. L. McLaren, Assistant Registrar of Vital Statistics, for the State Department of Health has made an analysis of the statistics for divorces granted in Iowa in 1925, based upon the U. S. Census Bureau report. In the year 1925, 4,112 divorces were granted in Iowa as compared with 3,782 in 1924. Two-thirds of the divorces wereg ranted to women.

The Code of Iowa specifies five grounds for divorce: (1) Adultery, (2) Desertion, (3) Conviction of felony, (4) Habitual drunkenness and (5) Inhuman treatment so as to endanger life. In addition to divorces annulment of marriages is possible (1) Where the marriage is contrary to law, (2) Where either person is impotent at time of marriage, (3) Where bigamy has been committed and (4) Where either person is insane or idiotic.

The following table classifies the divorces in reference to the five grounds enumerated above:

Minor Causes	3	60	63
Conviction of Crime	2	56	58
Bigamy	1	4	5

All others not reported as to cause.

Divorces Classified by Cause and by Party to Whom Granted, Iowa 1925

	Granted to
All Causes—	Husband	Wife
4,112	912	3,200
			Total
Major Causes—	891	3,071	3,962
Adultery	96	90	186
Cruel and inhuman treatment	495	2,379	2,874
Desertion	297	498	795
Drunkenness	3	104	107
Combination of Causes—	14	66	80
Aultery and Cruelty	6	15	21
Adultery and Desertion	2	3	5
Adultery and Drunkenness	2	0	2
Cruelty and Desertion	3	11	14
Cruelty and Drunkenness	0	29	29
Cruelty and Minor Causes	0	5	5
Desertion and Drunkenness	1	2	3
Desertion and Neglect to provide	0	1	1

The greater number of divorces granted wives indicates either that the husband is most often the offender or at least that the wife most frequently makes application for divorce.

Of the total number of divorces the following comparative percentages were ascribed to specific causes:

	Percent granted to
Causes if Divorce	Husband	Wife
Adultery	10.5	2.8
Inhuman treatment	54.3	74.3
Desertion	32.6	15.6
Habitual Drunkenness	0.3	3.3
Combination of Causes	1.5	2.1
All other causes	0.8	2.0

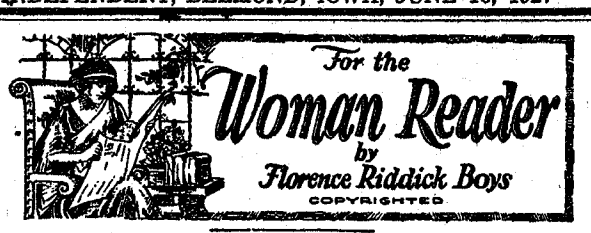
Most divorces originate within the first nine years of married life, 2,784 or 68 percent of all divorces coming within that period and 1,547 or over 35 percent under three years of wedded life. The average length of time that it took a divorce to develop was about six years. In 65 cases it took the couples over 25 years to find out that they had not the proper affinity.

The studies show that the couples were not the only parties affected by the divorces as 1,706 of the divorces or 41.5 percent involved children; 2,190 or 53.3 percent reported no children involved while for the others (216) there was nothing to indicate whether children were affected or not. The total number of minor children reported involved in the 4112 divorces was 3144.



WEDDING ETIQUETTE

The formal wedding is at high noon, and formal dress is, of course expected of all members of the bridal party. In the informal wedding the groom wears any dark suit. The bride is in white.

Wedding invitations are sent out by the bride's mother, even those to the friends of the bridegroom, for he has given her a list of those he wishes invited. All the expenses of the wedding are paid by the family of the bride, except the wedding ring, the gift to the bride, if any, the clergyman's fee and such gifts as the bridegroom may wish to present the best man and the ushers. The bride may give a wedding ring to the bridegroom if she wishes.

Wedding presents are always sent to the bride, even though the groom may be your friend and you may not know the bride.

When guests assemble for the home wedding, they are met at the door by the bride's mother, who is hostess for the occasion. If, however, the bride's mother does not wish to appear before the wedding, ushers may receive the guests.

The "wedding breakfast," really an elaborate dinner, follows the noon wedding. A wedding reception is much like any other reception, except that the bride's mother makes it a special point to honor the groom's family and have them meet all the bride's friends. Refreshments for the wedding reception are usually served buffet style, that is, they are heaped upon a large table in the center of the dining room and guests are served by waiters. Guests at the wedding reception retire after being served, in order that the bride and groom may spend the last half hour before their departure with their relatives and more intimate friends.

When the bride and groom have been served, they retire to dress for the wedding journey, if they have one. The bridegroom is at the foot of the stairway to receive the bride as she comes down. As she does so, she throws her shower bouquet among the bridesmaids. The one who catches it is to be the next bride, according to an old tradition. The custom of throwing rice, old shoes and confetti, is giving way to the more charming one of throwing flowers at the departing couple.

CARE OF THE HAIR

Cleanliness is necessary to pretty hair. The hair naturally catches and holds dust and dirt and germs, and should be shampooed frequently and brushed well daily. This is a hard rule in this day of the expensive marcel, but we pay the price of unhealthy scalps for our economy in brushing.

Dandruff is a germ disease and is contagious. One should not use the brush or comb used by a person with dandruff. Dandruff is a leading cause of baldness, and what wonder that our men are afflicted with it, considering the promiscuity of the average barber, who does not thoroughly sterilize the combs he uses on one customer after another?

Only pure, good soap should be used in the shampoo. A liquid soap is less likely to fade the hair in streaks. Massage it well into the scalp using water as warm as possible, then rinse in five or six waters, to get out all the soap and grease. Lemon juice or vinegar added to the last rinse water will help cut the soap which may remain. Blueing is a valuable addition to the last rinse water for those who have gray hair. It takes away the tendency to yellow, which strong soap effects, and leaves it a pretty blue gray.

Many women are afraid to have a permanent wave. It is the height of folly to trust the hair to an amateur for treatment. Nobody but an expert should be allowed to give you a permanent wave. Carelessness or ignorance may result in months of embarrassment for you while your hair is growing out.

THE LAWN

A velvety lawn is a thing of beauty in itself and enhances the appearance of the home. It requires wisdom to grow grass. If you are beginning a lawn, prepare the soil by a thorough plowing and fine raking. Make it perfectly even. Sow grass seed in the wet season. Early fall or very early spring is the best time.

It seldom pays to patch the barren space in the lawn, for the soil needs a deeper stirring up than you can give it and the patched places are certain to show for years. To patch is better than nothing, but if you can turn it all up thoroughly and begin over, so much the better.

Do not cut the young lawn too close. Let it get a good stand of roots first. In dry weather do not shave it as close as in a more moist season, or the roots may burn out.

Surface sprinkling is not good for the lawn. It is better to give the lawn a thorough soaking once or twice a week than a surface sprinkling every night.

If grass roots do not have to delve down deep into the ground to find moisture, they will stay near the surface and will be easily killed out in unfavorable seasons.

A LOVELY ROOM

An art committee has made the following rules for making a lovely room:

1. Eliminate all unnecessary articles.
2. Throw away plush picture frames and paper flowers.
3. Dye faded curtains.
4. Paint all scratched or damaged imitation woods. If you have a good piece of old wood, mahogany or walnut, clean and polish it.
5. Paint or paper your walls a neutral tint. Unless you have expert advice and much money, have your walls and ceiling the same shade.
6. Have one good picture—oil, water color, print or engraving—in each room until you can afford more. Photographs should be simply framed, not too many exposed, and never hung on the walls.
7. Grow living flowers in your home.

MADE-OVER DRESSES

Dresses seldom wear out—like the "One Horse Shay"—all over at once. There are worn places in used dresses and much good material which it will pay to make over into another dress. Sometimes two old dresses can be combined to make one made-over one.

It is almost impossible to match goods when making over a dress. Even goods off the same bolt will not match with that which has been worn. It is usually wisest to combine harmonizing goods and colors.

In combining two colors in a garment, one should be subdued and one should predominate to produce a pleasing harmony. Soft green and neutral tan can be used together.

EMPTYING TUBS

The housewife who does not have stationary tubs with a drain in them can save herself the hard task of emptying out the dirty washwater by the use of a hose which reaches outdoors to a drain. She uses the hose as a siphon. It may take some practice to learn how to do it correctly, but two or three times will make it easy. Immerse the hose under the water in the tub and be sure all air is driven out of it and it is filled with water. Stop up one end of the hose with the thumb or finger, pull that end out of the tub and let it down until it is below the bottom of the tub, then let the water run. It will run as long as one end is under water in the tub and the other end is lower than the bottom of the tub.

DECORATING THE CHURCH

A church was made very festive with sprays of lilacs or spirea fastened to the end of each pew and on decorative parts of the altar. At first those doing the decorating tried to tie these flower sprays in place but they had difficulty making them stay in place and it took too much time and the flowers wilted. Then a bright lady thought of using rubber bands. The bands were slipped about the top of each pew end; and the last moment before time for the company to assemble, a fresh spray of flowers was slipped into place, inside each rubber band. This saved hours of work and made a better appearance.

SHORTCAKE

To make shortcake for four persons, sift tigether two cups flour, two and one-half teaspoons baking powder, two tablespoons sugar and one teaspoon salt. With a fork, cut in one-third cup shortening. In a cup beat an egg and add enough milk to make the cup two-thirds full. This will require about a half cup milk. Bake in gem tins in a hot oven.

FRETLESS ENTERTAINING

The reason the housewife gets fussed when she has unexpected company is because she is not ready for them. Good roads and summer weather will bring us friends without always notice in advance. We will save ourselves much worry and embarrassment if we prepare for unexpected company.

That we may not be taken unawares, it is wise to make out a menu for a simple but good meal and have the ingredients in the house on our "emergency shelf." One can buy cans of things which may be hastily worked over into a good meal. A can of chicken will make a chicken salad or chicken a la king served on toast. Pimentoes, beet pickles, olives, salad dresing should be on hand at all times. On Saturday night the wary housewife will lay in a head lettuce, some fruit, cake or wafers and buns or sandwich bread. Cottage cheese, celery or other fresh supplies, added to what one is certain to have on hand, will ensure a good meald for the friend who drops in without warning.

SOURMILK AS A CLEANER

This is the time of the year when we have sourmilk, and it is not always easy to think of a good use for it. If you do not plan to utilize it in cooking, try using it as a cleaner. To soak in sour milk a fabric which has an ink spot on it will loosen up the inkspt so that it can be washed out. Sour milk will also act as a silver cleaner. Let your silver stand awhile in the sour milk and the tarnish will be removed.

Peter the Great

IN A shed in the great shipyard at Deptford, England, sat an uncouth laborer with shabby clothes, stained and dirty hands and tousled hair. He was toiling away at low wages, as a carpenter, and did not notice the looks of curiosity and awe that his fellow-workers ever cast toward him. He thought everybody about the yards believed him to be honest Peter, the foreign artisan recently hired by the superintendent. As a matter of fact, the entire force of laborers (as well as the authorities, the police and the British government) recognized the rough-looking fellow for what he was. They knew him to be Peter I, czar of the Russias, and knew that he was visiting England in disguise that he might study shipbuilding and pick out a force of sailors, laborers and engineers to carry back to Russia.

Peter I—known to history as Peter the Great—had chosen one of the most difficult life-tasks that can be imagined. He had resolved to make half-barbarous Russia an up-to-date, civilized, progressive nation.

Russia was semioriental, utterly unprogressive, with no navy worth mentioning, no army except a horde of ill-organized militia, and was woefully lacking in modern thought, culture or civilization. One man set out to reform all this. And he did it.

Peter was the third son of Czar Alexis. His eldest brother, Fedor, succeeded to the throne in 1676, when Peter was but four years old. Eight years later Fedor died, and Peter's next oldest brother, Ivan, a half-witted nonentity, came to the throne. Within a very few years Peter planned to oust Ivan and seize the reins of government. But his sister Sophia stirred up the militia against him, and he was forced to reign jointly with her and with Ivan. He bided his time and, by his marriage and other political moves, soon gained enough power to put Sophia into a convent for life and to convert Ivan into a mere figurehead. The latter died in 1696, leaving Peter in undisputed control.

He wanted naval power, and for this reason mapped out a double course—first, to perfect the art of shipbuilding and naval warfare in Russia, and second, to win two outlets (at the Neva and the mouth of the Don) for Russian fleets and commerce. For the ice-blocked White sea was often useless for such purposes.

He personally went in disguise to Holland and England, where, working in shipyards, he gained a knowledge of the art and was able to hire workers for his own yards. He also entered the Russian army as a private, and worked his way up through each rank.

Eager to try his new navy and to win the desired "outlet," he waged war on Turkey and captured Azoff, at the Don's mouth. He made a second tour of Europe and took for Russia the best customs of each country.

Still in pursuit of his scheme to give Russia a seaboard, Peter joined Denmark and Poland in war against Sweden. Charles XII, the young Swedish king, put the allies to rout in the first campaign, but later Russia was victorious. In a war with the Turks Peter was less fortunate, and to save his army from destruction was obliged to surrender important strongholds. He captured the Finland gulf territory, and built at the outlet of the Neva a new city, which he named St. Petersburg. In 1713 he moved the seat of government there from Moscow.

Five years later occurred an event that placed an eternal stain on the czar's greatness. He had but one son living—a weak, lazy, dissolute youth, Alexis, on whom all his hopes were centered. Peter tried in every way to interest the boy in affairs of state. But Alexis could not or would not learn. Peter's hot temper blazed up, and henceforth the cowardly boy lied to his father about his progress in study; and, while loafing, pretended to be working hard. All this was a sore trial to the ambitious Peter, and he bore it with scant patience. At last Alexis woke up and showed for once a very keen interest in politics. But the political project in which he exhibited this lively enthusiasm was a plot against his father's throne and life.

Enraged beyond endurance, Peter had Alexis arrested, tried and condemned. On July 5, 1718, the young man was imprisoned. Two days later he was found dead in his cell. Three theories have been advanced as to his death. First, that in panic of fright, he committed suicide. Second, that Peter visited him in order to urge him to repentance, and in an excess of rage murdered him. Third, that he died under torture applied to make him confess his accomplices names.

Seven years later Peter himself died at the age of fifty-two. Russia itself is this strange man's best epitaph and monument. He found it barbaric. He left it civilized. He added six great provinces to Russia's territory and made her a leading naval, political and commercial power. No man, perhaps, better deserves the two titles voted him by the Russian senate: "The Great" and "Father of His Country."

"Make any difference in the price?" the customer asked.

"No," replied Pete.

"Well then," the hungry customer said, "cook 'em with a nice slice of ham."

Eagle Grove Eagle: It is not at all improbable that the counties hatening to vote the issue of bonds to pave their roads, with the expectation the state will pay them, will find they are making a wrong guess and will have to pay the bonds themselves. It is not reasonable or logical that such a thing could be constitutional. Eventually these counties will find the burden of these bonds are upon their own shoulders, or the state highway commission will not sanction their issue until they can be paid from the automobile license and gas tax fund. The highway commission will only consistently use this fund first in road building where the need is most urgent. Northern Iowa counties with their fine graveled roads will neither get nor hasten paved roads in their counties by voting bonds, and it is not at all reasonable that they have the constitutional right to vote bonds they can saddle upon the state to pay.

AGRICULTURAL NEWS NOTES

BEEF FEEDING ONE OF STATE FAIR ITEMS

Actual result, which Iowa farmers are achieving in developing more profitable feeding methods in producing the $153,000,000 worth of beef marketed annually from the farms of Iowa, are to be demonstrated in a comprehensive exhibit at the coming Iowa State Fair, August 24 to September 2.

The exhibit will be put on through the cooperation of Iowa State College, the Sioux City Stock Yards, the United States Department of Agriculture, and the Iowa State Fair. It will seek especially to show the type of steers which show the best profits to the farmers when fed out, and the types of feeds which have proven most effective in producing a profit on feeding operations.

The Stock Yards will furnish live animals of the different types available to the farmer for feeding purposes, and side by side with these different types, will be shown finished animals of the same grades, after they have been fed out on Iowa Farms. In another section of the exhibit will be shown the finished cuts of meat obtained from these different grades, with explanations showing why certain grades are worth more on the market than others.

The exhibit will also embrace an explanation of the new United States Government markings whereby the housewife may tell exactly the quality of meat which she is purchasing.

HOW BIG IS A FARM?

In 1926, the average farm contained 161.5 acres which was 0.2 acre less than in 1925, as shown by the assessor's reports to the Weather and Crop Bureau of the Iowa Department of Agriculture. Prior to 1922, there was a tendency for farms to decrease in size by subdivision. Since then the tendency has been to increase by consolidation but this tendency showed a slight wavering in 1926.

Farms average smaller in counties in which the larger cities are located, nearly in inverse proportion to the size of the cities. The average size is smallest, 120 acres in Polk county and greatest, 204 acres, in Lyon county. Roughly speaking, northwest Iowa is the region of larger and southeast Iowa the region of smaller farms.

How Much of Iowa Is Agricultural?

Over 95 per cent of Iowa's 35,784,000 acres is in the deeded areas of farms, according to reports of assessors. To be exact, 34,174,847 acres are in farms the remaining 1,609,000 acres being occupied by cities, railways, mines, quarries, state parks and accretion lands along the great boundary rivers.

A total of 211,637 farms were listed by the assessors in their report for 1926. This is an increase of 80,772 acres and 738 farms over 1925, which probably indicates more diligence on the part of the assessors and cheerful cooperation on the part of the farmers, than it does an actual change of conditions.

The assessors reported 894,034 acres more in 1926 than the government census of 1924 which excludes highways. At the sametime, they reported 1,853 less farms because the federal census includes all tracts, however small, yielding an income of $250 in 1924.

Cultivated Acres In Iowa

Approximately two-thirds of the farm area of Iowa is actually in cultivated crops. In 1926, 21,460,321 acres were in cultivated crops. In spite of drouth, flood hail and other calamaties, Iowa farmers raised 18,315 more acres of crops in 1926 than in 1925.

Had it not been for these adversities, 118,838 more acres would have been added to the crops. Such adversities rendered 27,608 more acres idle in 1926 than in 1925. This was mostly in the drouth stricken northwest counties though there were a few "hailed" and "flooded" areas in other parts of the state.

After all the total acres made idle by adversity in 1926 amount to only the cultivated acres of about five out of 1603 townships. While the loss was a real hardship to the individuals and communities directly involved, the production of the state was not appreciably affected. The damage from hail alone amounted to $2,342,187 or about half of one per cent of the estimated total value of the crops.

SMALL GRAIN CROPS IN IOWA SHOW PROGRESS

The winter wheat crop of Iowa has a favorable outlook. Growing conditions have been beneficial nearly all spring and the plants are beginning to head rapidly. The winter conditions had no serious affect upon winter wheat, the plants have stooled favorably and show a healthy color. The western area of the Iowa winter wheat belt reports a more favorable growth than other areas, a number of counties showing a condition of wheat as much as 15 to 18 percent above the past ten-year average condition of normal.

The Federal and State Crop Reporting Service rates the June 1, 1927 condition of the Iowa winter wheat as 89 percent of normal. This condition indicates a probable yield of 21 bushels per acre. The condition a year ago was estimated as 81 percent and the past ten-year average is 82.4 percent. On the basis of an acreage of 363,000 acres remaining for harvest, a total production of 7,623,000 bushels is indicated. The harvest of 1926 amounted to 7,310,000 bushels. The total harvest in the United States in 1926 was 626,929,000 bushels, and the indicated production for 1927 is 537,001,000 bushels.

The June 1 condition of spring wheat has been estimated as 88 percent or about two percent under the condition a year ago. Conditions at seeding time delayed getting the seed into the ground in favorable shape and growth has been slow since. In the lowland fields excessive moisture with a deficiency of sunshine has given the plants a yellow, undernourished appearance. Approximately 63 percent of the spring wheat acreage of Iowa is in the western one-third of the state, and in this belt the crop shows greater potential ability for producing a favorable crop than in some of the other sections. The north central group of eleven counties, having at least five percent of the spring wheat acreage, reports a condition of 92 percent of normal, or four points above the state average.

Although the factors influencing the growth of oats have been favorable apparently this crop has not made normal progress this spring. The average June 1 condition of Iowa oats for the past ten years is 90.1 percent of normal. The present June condition is estimated as 86 percent. The seeding of oats was delayed by the frequent rains and reports from various parts of the state show that some acreage was being seeded as late as May 20. In the central group of twelve counties, covering 15 percent of the oats acreage of Iowa, the average condition on June 1, 1927 equalled the average of the past ten years. The northwestern group of twelve counties covering the largest percentage of the total acreage is reporting an average condition of 87 percent. Some of the acreage intended for oats, and some of the seeded acreage which was drowned, has gone into corn and miscellaneous hay crops.

Pastures and the various hay crops have a more favorable outlook than for a number of years. Pastures have been making rapid progress during the spring and the June 1 condition of 96 percent, is about three points ahead of the condition a month ago. The condition of Iowa pastures a year ago was rated at only 71 percent of normal, and the ten-year average condition is 84.6 percent of normal.

Tame hay condition in Iowa is rated at 93 percent, wild haf at 94 percent and alfalfa at 90 percent, as compared with June 1, 1926 condition of 70 percent for tame hay, 73 percent for wild hay and 80 percent for alfalfa. Timothy and clover are generally showing very favorable growth but alfalfa has suffered some winter damage and shows relatively thin stands on hillsides and in the lowlands.

FARM MORTGAGES ON DECLINE

A recent survey of the farm mortgage situation in 11 township of 6 counties in Iowa, completed by the Agricultural Economics Department, Iowa State College, shows that there is a mortgaged indebtedness on slightly less than 57 percent of the farm land. In 1915 this percenta ge was only 32, while the peak of mortgaged indebtedness was slightly higher than 57 percent.

The same survey showed that in 1915 the total mortgaged indebtedness in the area covered was $453,000. In 1923, this amount had grown to $1,385,000, receding to $1,194,000 in 1925. The number of acres against which mortgages were held was as follows: 7,300 in 1915, 12,400 in 1923 and 11,800 in 1925. The per acre indebtedness has decreased from almost $112 in 1925 to slightly over $101 in 1926.

This reduction in the total mortgaged indebtedness is due, not primarily to a normal repayment of money, but rather to foreclosures and reversion of the mortgaged property, according to a statement issued by Dr. C. L. Holmes, head of the Agricultural Economics Department, under whom the survey was conducted.

ASPARAGUS ACREAGE INCREASES

"More and more gardeners are turning to asparagus as a cash crop," states C. V. Holsinger, extension horticulturist, Iowa State College, Ames. This crop is now being produced for canneries rather than for the retail trade, Mr. Holsinger says.

Prosperity Farms, Waterloo, have planted 450,000 plants—equivalent to two carloads of plants—on 80 acres this year. The entire acreage is going into the Martha Washington variety, which, according to Mr. Holsinger, is one of the largest, most succulent varieties for Iowa growing. The same producer has let the contract for the growing of 500000 plants for next year's planting.

One of the features of asparagus production, Mr. Holsinger states, is that, once established, the bed is practically permanent. Tip freezing or hail does not destroy the entire crop for the year but only a very small fraction of the crops, because the new shoots will come up from the crown regardless of injury to the first crop of stalks.

ADVOCATE SIDE DELIVERY RAKE

Red clover or alfalfa hay is hard to cure, and one machine that will greatly aid is the side delivery rake, say the farm crops specialists at Iowa State College, Ames.

With this machine, the hay is raked into windrows as soon as it is wilted and there allowed to cure. The windrow is turned once and some times twice during the curing process to insure even curing.

Curing these crops in the windrow insures that the stems and leaves will cure at a more uniform rate, thus preserving more of the leaves, which are the most valuable part of the plant.

In the event of rain after the hay is raked, it should be turned with the side delivery rake as soon as the top of the windrow becomes somewhat dry. Turning the hay onto dry ground at this time will permit it to cure more rapidly than would be the case if it were in the swath at the time of the rain, the crops men say.

In raking with the side delivery it is advisable to drive in the same direction as the hay was cut, raking two swaths together. In turning the hay in the windrow after it is partially cured, drive in the same direction as in the previous raking and turn the windrow with the rear end of the rake in a manner similar to turning a furrow with a plow. In other words, the windrow should be turned so that the previous bottom side is up. This will avoid moving the hay and more than necessary and minimize the loss of leaves.

By using tight bottomed racks and properly equipped hay loaders, much of the loss of leaves may be avoided, the Iowa State crops men say.

Many thrifty housewives have refinished old furniture, making it look new and modern with several fresh coats of paint. But first it is necessary to remove the old finish. Several nondescript pieces may seem to be a set, by being painted the same color; thus a room may be made harmonious and cheery by pieces painted the new whites, greens or gay new colors.

FARM BUREAU

A large crowd met at the C. J. Janssen home last Friday evening for the Farm Bureau meeting. A very interesting program was carried out. Prof. E. G. Rood, of Ames expert on chicken diseases, spoke along his line. Mr. Parsons, Secretary of the Fair Association, from Mason City, presented his ideas on the worthwhile features of the county and state fairs and said that to get the most out of attending these fairs one must have a definite purpose in view and not attend merely for entertainment, but for the educational advantages one may gain. County Agent Oleson was present, also. The 4H girls gave very interesting reports of their four-day outing and were highly complimented for the manner in which they presented their reports. Educational pictures were shown out of doors, and at the close, refreshments were served. Those present were pleased with the evening's program and entertainment.

News About Iowa People and Events

At the dedication of the fine new building which is to house the business of the Des Moines branch of the International Harvester company, a new implement was on exhibition which attracted much attention. It was devised for the purpose of eliminating the corn borer. It consists of two revolving cylinders equipped with numerous blades. The implement is drawn by a tractor and the power that revolves the blades with terrific force is conveyed from the tractor by a device resembling a tumbling-rod. The machine takes two rows of corn stubble, the stalks having been previously removed and burned, and after the knives pass over and through the stubble and roots there is not a vestige remaining, so perfect has been the efficiency of the revolving knives. The corn borer is supposed to pass the winter in the stalk and roots but by the time this equipment gets in its work there is nothing but dust left. The government has purchased 8,000 of these machines and they are now at work in the corn borer territory in Michigan, Ohio and Indiana. The government charges one dollar per acre for the "treatment" given.

While assistant attorney general a few years ago, James A. Kindig, newly appointed judge of the supreme court, conducted one of the most notable criminal law suits in the annals of Iowa jurisprudence, which resulted in the conviction of a Chinese for murder, the only such case on record in the state. Sing Lee, a Chinese laundryman, was found dead in his basement room at Story City in 1917. Near the body was a revolver. Quan Sue was brot back from Butte, Montana and convicted on evidence connecting him with the purchase of the revolver in San Francisco. He is now serving a life sentence at Fort Madison. The trial attracted many wealthy Chinamen from New York, San Francisco and other cities.

Mount Ayr, Ringgold county, upon the eve of the completion of a fine new court house, has taken a plan to beautify the highways leading into the city. That city has a Garden Club that takes great delight in rendering community service, the slogan of the club being, "Mount Ayr's Beauty Our Civic Duty." The club is constantly on the look-out for some outstanding effort in the way of beautifying the place. An unusual opportunity was presented when M. E. Freland donated one hundred three-year-old Dorothy Perkins climbing rose bushes for the adornment of the four primary roads leading to Mount Ayr. Twenty-five bushes have been set out on each of the highways and many of them should bloom during the coming summer. George B. Smith, chairman of the board of supervisors, placed the rose bushes on primary road No. 3 east of the city, R. L. Fry on No. 3 west, Willard Link on No. 16 north and Roy Wilkinson on No. 16 south. Such a procedure places Mount Ayr at the head of the procession in beautifying the approaches to the city.

QUICK BREAD

Scald one quart of sweet, skimmed milk and let it cool. Add one-fourth cup each of lard and sugar, one and one-half tablespoon of salt, two compressed yeast cakes, and three quarts of sifted flour. Beat all together and let it rise twice and then mold out into loaves and let it rise again and bake. If kept in a warm place it will rise very quickly. Water may be used instead of milk, but milk gives it a fine white texture and makes the crust a lovely golden brown. If you prefer the bread less sweet do not use so much sugar.

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I.—Garth Guthrie, Canadian war veteran, having to live in the open on account of weakened lungs, is factor of a Hudson's Bay post at Elkwan. He came back from the conflict with a permanently scarred face, which he realizes cost him the love of his fiancee, Edith Falconer. Sir Charles Guthrie, his brother, is a millionaire war profiteer.

CHAPTER II.—With Etienne Savanne, halfbreed, his firm friend, Garth meets Doctor Quarrier, geologist, and his sister Joan. Their schooner has drifted ashore. Quarrier complains he has been robbed by a man known as "Laughing McDonald" or to the Indians as "McDonald Ha! Ha!" because of a scar which gives him a perpetual grin. McDonald is Garth's competitor for the fur trade. At Elkwan an Indian girl, Ninda, tuberculosis victim, whom Garth has befriended, is dying. Quarrier hints that Ninda is Garth's mistress, which is hotly resented. Joan, trained war nurse, cares for Ninda, but the girl dies.

Old Anne shuffled in with the steaming stew and crisp whitefish, her wide, wrinkled face alight with pride in the dignity of her office. Quarrier was deep in the narrative of his summer voyage to the east coast of Hudson's bay in the interest of a Toronto syndicate, which had been formed to explore the region and to exploit, if commercially practicable, the copper and iron deposits known to exist, when the sound of coughing from an inner room brought Guthrie to his feet.

"Pardon me," he said, and left them.

Quarrier's thick eyebrows knotted. "He's paying the piper now. How an educated man, as he seems to be, can come up here in this Godforsaken country in the first place, and then take up with a squaw—Pah!"

The girl he addressed sat tense, with chin up, listening, as though she had not heard. In a moment Guthrie opened the door, his face gray with anxiety.

"Could you come—a moment?" he asked the girl who had risen from the table. "You said you could help—she's pretty bad?"

Joan Quarrier hurried to her medicine kit in Gordon's room, emerged, and followed him. There, to the annoyance of the man who ate heavily of Anne's cooking, they stayed until he had finished. At length, when the opiate had brought respite to the sufferer, Joan and Guthrie returned to the living room.

"I'm sorry, sir," said Guthrie, "that you should be disturbed—that I should need the services of your sister, but she's been a godsend."

Quarrier nodded stolidly, without removing his pipe from his mouth. Then, as if spurred by a sense of duty to the performance of a task not too disagreeable, cleared his throat and began:

"Mr. Guthrie, may I ask how you, a man of education and family, find yourself in a—minor position, so to speak, with the Hudson's Bay company?"

A corner of Guthrie's mouth lifted. His rather deep-set eyes shifted from the questioner to meet the glance of the girl, half amused at the abrupt question, half wondering at his answer.

"Your question is a fair one," he replied. "I came here for my health. I came back from overseas with gassed lungs."

"Ah, I see. Where was your home, may I ask?"

"Montreal."

"You—you can't be a relative of Charles Guthrie?" demanded the other, his interest suddenly aroused.

"Brother."

"You, a brother of Charles Guthrie!" Quarrier's prominent eyes bulged in amazement at the factor of Elkwam.

"You are more flattering to my brother than to me," and Guthrie joined Joan Quarrier in an amused smile.

"But you're not staying in this country—this business, since you've regained your health?"

"I don't know. I rather like the life."

"Charles Guthrie is a member of the syndicate which sent me to the east coast to examine those iron and copper deposits. He'll be interested to hear from you at first hand."

Again the firm mouth of Guthrie shaped a faint smile.

"I'm not so sure of that. He's rather given me up as a black sheep, you know."

"For staying up here, I presume?"

"Yes, for not coming home—this summer."

"Um!"

Guthrie rose, and lighting a candle, for the September night had fallen, carried it to the sick room, where old Anne was on guard. Returning, he lit the small living-room lamp. And in the mind of the woman who watched, surmise followed surmise concerning the factor of Elkwan, for in the room he had given up to her were three autographed likenesses of a beautiful girl.

Then Quarrier described in detail the accident to his power schooner off Cape Jones, the wild night on the bay with an improvised and useless rudder, and the stranding on the beach of Akimiski island.

"It was the next morning that this red-headed pirate, McDonald, discovered us and sent a boat ashore."

"You say he took some of your stuff?" asked Guthrie.

"Yes, he said he needed flour and gasoline."

"And he got it?" suggested the other, with a laugh.

"Yes, but instead of paying what it's worth here, on the bay, he paid me St. John's prices."

"Well, for a pirate, he was rather liberal, wasn't he? He hails from St. John's, they say. Has been up here two summers, but always went back in the autumn. This year he told some of the Indians that he would winter in a cove at the south end of the island. Akimiski is famous for silver and black fox."

"I can't understand why the company doesn't run him out of the bay if he's hurting their business."

Guthrie laughed. "Why, man, he has as much right here as we, or the Revillon Freres. And as to running him out, I'm inclined to think that McDonald would take a lot of running. Did you happen to go aboard his schooner?"

"Yes, I went board to get my money."

"You didn't notice a machine gun or two lying around?"

"No!"

"Well, the Crees say he has them. Evidently, he has come to stay."

"So you're going to sit calmly here and let him get the fur?" snorted Quarrier, contemptuously.

"That's it," agreed Guthrie. "You see, we're a bit afraid of this wild man with the scarred face. The rumor has drifted up here that he had an impressive war record."

The irony was lost on the geologist.

"Afraid to fight for your rights, eh?" he ridiculed, oblivious of the bullet-furrowed cheek of the man who faced him.

At the reproach, the face of Guthrie lit with amusement, but a glint in the half-closed eyes prompted Joan Quarrier, mortified by her brother's gaucherie, to intervene.

"To a Canadian veteran, that remark is positively insulting. I fail to recall anything of a warlike nature in your manner with our pirate, Arch. As a matter of fact, you seemed quite overawed."

"Overawed? Ridiculous!" snapped Quarrier. "I was glad to sell flour and gas we couldn't take with us."

Guthrie's twinkling eyes met those of the girl. "They say his scarred mouth is rather awe-inspiring. Possibly scars are repulsive to your brother," he suggested. "They are—to some people."

The tone of the last—the sudden tightening of face muscles—the swift sobering of the eyes, spurred the quick intuition of the girl to pierce the armor of his raillery, to surmise what the seared cheek of the speaker might have brought to him of bitterness, and pain. But why? she wondered. The red line from eye to ear only lent dignity—distinction, to the cleanly modeled features. Why should this badge of service be the source of secret humiliation? But she was confident that it was.

Quarrier changed the subject. "By the way, Mr. Guthrie, when can you send for the stuff I left on the beach and take it to Albany? I can pick it up next spring when I return to the bay."

Evidently deeply occupied with his thought, for a space the man addressed made no answer; then he said, indifferently: "Some time this winter, possibly, when the ice sets hard in the strait."

"What? Not before then? There are some valuable ore specimens and stores—boxes of them. That pirate will come back for them."

"We'll be hunting geese until cold weather drives them south."

"You're not hunting geese here, are you? Why couldn't you go before you go on your hunt—tomorrow, in fact?"

"Archie!" The sharp challenge of Joan Quarrier at the callous insistence of her brother was checked by the level tones of the factor.

"Because, at present, my duty is here, as you can see."

Then the man, whose intimate knowledge of the inanimate had seemingly taught him little of men, laughed rawly:

"Your duty? Yes, I suppose when you fur people get yourselves into a mess of this kind," he nodded toward the door, "you feel you have to see it through."

Joan Quarrier rose from her chair, stunned by the stupid brutality of the remark—fearful of the retribution it deserved. Eyes black with anger, Guthrie glared at his guest, who, sensible of his mistake, grinned sheepishly, then flushed to the roots of his stiff hair. The muscles in the face of the factor knotted, the veins in the brown neck above the flannel shirt swelled with blood in his efforts at self-control.

"I—I went too far," Quarrier mumbled. "I didn't mean, of course—" But he was cut off short with:

"Your bed is in the trade-house! You know the way!"

The long arm of Guthrie pointed to the door.

For a space Quarrier stared into the cold eyes; then, stung by the outrage to his dignity, got to his feet in angry protest.

"What do you mean? You dare insult me—order me out of your house like an inferior?" But there was that in the face of the man whose arm still indicated the door which wrung the bluster from the geologist as water is wrung from a rag.

"You'll hear from this—this conduct of yours. I'll report this to your superiors," protested Quarrier, as he stormed out of the room.

Guthrie turned to the girl, who was visibly swept by shame—stirred by an emotion which left her weak, clouded eyes fixed on the man who said in a voice still thick with anger:

"I'm sorry, Miss Quarrier—so sorry. He—went—too far."

"You were right—he was impossible," she agreed in a voice raw with disgust, with a slow nod of the dark head. "He has always blundered—always failed to understand."

"I want to tell you about her."

She turned on him almost fiercely. "Do you think I, also, do not understand?" she demanded.

For a space he searched her tense, white face; then replied, cryptically, "You have served with the wounded; it is enough."

He went to the door and whispered to old Anne. Then he began:

"She came here in June with some Ojibwas, from far beyond the Elkwan headwaters, for this is a Cree country. They were not her own people, I am convinced, but one of the men claimed to be her father. She was not sure, for she had grown up with them—didn't even know her age, but she can't be more than eighteen. Old Anne found her sick in a tipi—half fed—neglected. We took her in, and for a time the canned milk and the broth worked a miracle. She was happy—too; that helped.

"When the trade was over and the Indians started for their summer camps, they demanded her—and she could hardly walk a hundred yards without resting. Of course, they didn't really want her; their purpose was to hold me up. They asked for everything in the store. They always do when such a thing happens—an Indian girl stays behind, at the factor's quarters.

"You see they thought this was the old situation—so did the Crees—in spite of what Anne told them. They couldn't understand. Well, I finally got rid of her people—kicked them out. For weeks she was so happy."

Guthrie tiptoed to the sickroom door, looked in, and returned.

"In her last conversation with the Indian who called himself her father, I heard her repeatedly say 'Nin da, nin da!' She was so earnest about it, I asked Etienne what it meant, and he told me it was Ojibwa for 'I stay here.' Pretty, isn't it? Nin da, I dwell here. She has chosen her home. So we called her Ninda. She was one of us.

"You're Not Hunting Geese Here, Are You?"

"Miss Quarrier," went on the man whose face had softened—grown boyish, "it fairly tore my heart—the happiness, the gratitude of that sick child. Those big eyes of hers followed me like a dog's. I had rescued her, no doubt, from unspeakable misery. . . . It was only natural, I suppose.

"After a few weeks she began to fail, and in August, when they called me to Albany, I couldn't throw off the memory of the despair in her eyes when I left. You see she feared she would not live until I returned—wanted me there when it came. Her eyes haunted me—every mile of the coast.

"This last time when I went, she bade me good-by—was sure that it was the end. But we needed the geese—we had to go. . . . I've seen men die—my friends; but those wistful eyes! . . . It's tragic. . . . and she so young."

Guthrie stopped his pacing to run his fingers nervously through his dark hair.

"Oh, the dumb misery, here in the north! Think if she'd stayed with her people, to die in a tipi—neglected! I'm thankful if I've eased the loneliness—the pain—for one."

The sound of coughing, followed by Old Anne's frightened face in the doorway, summoned them to the other room. The effects of the opiate had worn off. The woman who had "served with the wounded" wiped the crimsoned lips that moved in vain attempt at utterance, as the large eyes, bright with fever, clung to the face of the man who sat beside the cot.

"You go to bed, Anne," said Guthrie to the wrinkled Cree. "I will be here the rest of the night." With muttered protest the old woman shuffled from the room.

Presently the dry lips of the sick girl again moved. "She wants to say something," said the nurse, and left them.

Guthrie bent over the pillow.

"You go—no more?" he faintly heard.

He smiled into the questioning eyes, as he shook his head. "No more—Ninda."

The heavy lids slowly drooped.

Through the slow hours of the night they sat beside the waif, who, out of the wilderness had come to Elkwan, and was now—returning. And in the intervals between her ministrations to the life which was slipping away, the guest of Guthrie learned much of the man with whom she shared the night watch.

In the candor of his explanation of the presence of the Indian girl at Elkwan, he had unconsciously revealed to the curious woman who studied him, intimate glimpses of heart. The emblem of the Distinguished Service order which he wore in the photograph in his bedroom vouched for his caliber as a soldier. But why, she mused, did the brother of the rich Charles Guthrie linger in the wilderness of the west coast when a girl of such loveliness as her three photographs suggested waited for his return? For the nature of their relations was established beyond doubt by the written sentiment on the photographs. Yet, his health returned, he seemed to be deliberately staying on in the north. What was behind it all, wondered Joan Quarrier; not pity for this poor child, who, in the manner of her kind, had given him worship for the only kindness life had vouchsafed her. That, clearly, would have anchored Guthrie at Elkwan while Ninda lived, but in face of the fact that the girl was desperately ill—could not live into the autumn, he had prepared to winter on the west coast. Why?

So, together, they kept their watch, where, through the halting hours, the spirit of the waif of the forests hovered, awaiting release. Once, after a paroxysm of coughing, the veil of delirium lifted and there was a moment of consciousness. He leaned to her and the fear which looked from the groping eyes faded as she recognized the scarred cheek. The wraith of a smile touched the drawn mouth.

As the stars paled above the purple tundra of Akimiski, again she recognized the face of Guthrie. Her lips moved. His straining ears caught a faint "Bo-jo," the Ojibwa farewell. . . . Then a crimsoned froth welled from the tortured lungs.

"You must go now. We will care for her."

For a space he stood beside the cot, then said:

"Good-by, Ninda. As you wished it, you will stay—here, with your friends." He turned cryptically to the nurse. "She was a soldier; she did not flinch from wounds," and went out, followed by the puzzled eyes of the other.

Then, outside, in the cool dusk of the clearing rose a wail, mournful, unearthly, followed by another and another.

"It's too ghastly," she said with a shiver. "How do they know?"

"They always know—always wail for the dead." And he went out to quiet the dogs.

At the gate of the stockade stood the airedale, joining the huskies in their threnody under the fading stars. At Guthrie's command, the dog stopped and trotting up, with a muffled whine thrust his moist nose into his master's hand.

"Ninda's gone, Shot."

Daylight found man and dog on the high river shore. At times the man spoke to the airedale, who, sensing his master's mood, repeatedly returned from short excursions to nuzzle Guthrie's hand. Again and again, before the light came, the whimpering huskies had taken up their wailing, to be checked by the man on guard, whose thoughts traversed the swift weeks of the summer.

Out of the silent places, this doomed child of the valiant heart had come, and now—into the silence had gone. What must have been her despair, he thought, to have left her people and sought sanctuary among strangers. But it had been friends she had found.

But what a miracle to have had that schooner driven on Akimiski with the girl who had shared the watch with him! What a solace and rock she had been—those fine, straight-gazing dark eyes, and capable hands.

It was because she had understood—had resented his thinking it necessary to explain the situation at Elkwan that he had been able to talk so freely of Ninda. She had proved her mettle—she, too, was a soldier. He pictured Ethel, with her horror of the ugly, thrown into the situation which Joan Quarrier had calmly met with delicacy and skill.

That afternoon Etienne and Guthrie erected a spruce cross over the fresh grave in the little post cemetery and on the white wood of the arm, Guthrie burned with a hot iron the inscription: "In Memory of Ninda—A Soldier," which for years was to be the cause of much shaking of puzzled heads among the whites and the Crees who saw it.

At dawn the following morning, Guthrie's York boat with a Peterboro canoe in tow, slowly picked its way through the river mist of the Elkwan delta. In the stern, steering with a sweep hewn from a spruce sapling, stood the wiry Etienne, who knew the channels of the river mouths and the depths of the shoal coast from the Raft to Albany. To give the craft steerage way on the first of the ebb, the sailors of the shipwrecked schooner manned four long oars. In the bow, the geologist, still smarting from his humiliation, talked in low tones to his sailing master. Beside the steersman stood Guthrie, holding a compass, for the shores were invisible. Near him, with forefoot on the rail the airedale peered into the white wall of mist, his black nostrils dilating as he caught, at intervals, on the moist air, scents vague, illusive, enticing.

"You are losing valuable time from your goose hunt by taking us to Albany in your boat," suggested Joan Quarrier to Guthrie, who had found a seat beside her.

"After what you've done, I could not send you off in that ship's boat. You might have been days making Albany—had serious trouble getting ashore to make camp if the wind changed. It's a tricky coast. You're not much like your dignified brother," he answered, his face lighting in amusement as he glanced toward the sulking Quarrier. "He's hardly worrying about our goose supply for the winter."

The clean-cut mouth of the man beside her curled in the smile she had come to associate with the factor of Elkwan. Then her eyes, shifting to the dim ribbon of spruce edging the marshes, saw the face of the girl of the photograph at the post, and she wondered what was behind it all.

He studied the profile of Joan Quarrier, the musing eyes with the strongly marked brows, the half-parted lips, the frame of chestnut hair shot with gold. Fine, it was, he thought with the beauty of expression; but above its comeliness of line and skin—the stamp of strength, the essence of character. The absent look faded from her eyes.

"I can understand on a day like this," she said, "what you mean by this gray coast holding you. It's so untouched—so primeval. It seems almost as if we were the first to see it."

"It's like this for a thousand miles—the west coast," he replied, "with a few fur posts at the mouths of the rivers."

"You won't be here for the Black Brant and the Grand geese. They are the last to reach the west coast—they and the swans."

"Swans?"

He nodded. "You haven't heard the voice of the raw solitudes if you've missed the trumpeting of the swans, high against the October stars."

"Man, you're growing poetic."

"The swans and the gray geese," he went on, "typifying it all—the silence, the loneliness, the beauty."

For a space she sat, chin in hand, heavy brows contracted. Then she looked up with: "Like so many, the din and excitement of the war—the disillusion of its aftermath, has left you with abnormal nerves. This loneliness which attracts you now will make a hermit of you—a brooding eccentric. Go back to Montreal before it's too late."

"Not until I've had it out with Laughing McDonald," he laughed.

"But whatever do you do in winter here? You'll admit it's forlorn enough then. Is it hard to keep warm in this terrible cold?"

"Cold? Why, it's colder on the north shore of Superior, and there's not as much snow. Of course when the wind blows it's cold on the sea ice. It's cold anywhere then."

"And so you're actually not lonely," she persisted, "I've heard of men going mad."

"Oh, of course, there are times—" His wind-burned face darkened as he avoided her look. "But there are compensations, you know. Shot!" The airedale left the rail and pushing between Guthrie's knees, lifted his whiskered muzzle with a throaty rumble, his eyes searching his master's face.

His tail beating the air, the nose of the airedale wrinkled in a display of formidable face smiling down at him.

"He worships you, doesn't he?" said the girl.

"We went through the last months together—comrades. You see he found two of us—gassed—and brought help."

The brown hands of Guthrie rubbed the airedale's small ears. Closing his eyes, Shot grunted in ecstacy.

"No, but we tire of pork, so when the goose is gone, go after caribou."

"And that is what keeps you here this winter," she hazarded, "when it might be Montreal; your love of hunting—the wilderness?"

She is thinking of the pictures of Ethel, Guthrie surmised, and wonders why I stay. As the York boat traveled, pushed by the following breeze, his gaze swept the shimmering waters of the gray strait to the sunlit barrens of the island. Then he faced her frankly.

"I'm not sure what keeps me here. It pulls me—the country, this life. After the war, everything was changed. Montreal had grown callous. No one cared for anything but pleasure—and money. It seemed as if the whole world had forgotten them—the ones who 'went west,' and what they died for. I grew to hate it—the office. My nerves were a bit jumpy from the gas, I suppose. I was off color, of course, but everybody who had been in it had a hard pull to readjust—to settle into the grind again. It was all new to me—business, the works, and I wished I was back with the battalion—with the mud, and the rest of it."

She nodded. "I know just how you felt. There were times after I returned when I was simply homesick for my wounded and the hospital life. I've really dreamed of it."

"It gets you, doesn't it? although you curse it while you're in it?" His gray eyes lit with memory.

She smiled in understanding. "It was hard, and awful—yet it does get one, as you say. It was life in the raw, stripped of the veneer—the shams. That is the reason, I suppose."

"Yes, stripped of the shams—that's it." He frowned, then went on. "Shot, here, misses it terribly—the noise, and excitement, and the men. He fights it all over again in his dreams. I know when he hears the guns or sees a Frits. He looks like a mad porcupine—all quills, as he thrashes in his sleep. Eh, Shot? . . . Stand to!"

With a low rumble in the hairy throat, the war dog leaped back, stiffening from nose to cocked tail, ears pricked, quivering nostrils testing the air, as the hair lifted on mane and back.

"Bravo, Shot!" she cried, reaching to pat the tense head of the dog. But the airedale ignored her, his small terrier eyes questioning Guthrie's face for the reason for the familiar "Alerte," which stirred wild memories of black nights shot with flashes of light; of noises great and small; of men crawling—running; of men lying still.

Guthrie calmed the excited dog. "You see, like the rest of us, he hasn't forgotten."

"Good old Shot!" And Joan Quarrier stroked the head of the dog who had returned to them. But her thoughts were of the girl in Montreal, and the riddle of Guthrie's exile.

Through the September day the York boat followed the coast south. In mid-afternoon Guthrie anchored off the Big Willow river and going ashore in the canoe, made camp that Joan Quarrier might have hot tea and food, and sleep, while he and Etienne, with the sailors, stayed with the boat.

The following afternoon, on the high south shore of Albany island, they saw the quaint, square roofs of the Oblate mission, and that night three men sat in the traderoom at historic Fort Albany, where each autumn, for two centuries, men had watched the last wedges of the gray geese fade into the south; seen the coming of the long snows and the ice bridge the river channels; starved or feasted through the slow beat of the desolate days. Here, in the red years of the Seventeenth century, the old log fort, built by the English, was stormed, retaken and stormed again, in the bitter war with the French for the fur trade. Here, generations of men had lived and loved and died, marooned in the James bay silences.

The talk of the three men in the traderoom centered on the meeting of the free-trader with Quarrier and the news that McDonald was to winter on the west coast.

"Major," said Hugh Cameron, the factor, dubiously shaking a grizzled head, "this fellow's wintering at Akimiski will ruin our fox trade. He'll be so handy to their traplines that they'll dribble in their pelts as fast as they get 'em, for his trade goods and groceries."

"Etienne counts on the loyalty of the older hunters. We intend to keep in touch with them."

IOWA BEET SUGAR HOLDS OWN

Women of Iowa should no longer lay their cooking troubles to the use of beet sugar instead of cane sugar, according to C. L. Fitch, horticulture extension specialist, Iowa State College, Ames. This statement is made following a review of the studies made on sugar beet growing and beet sugar uses by the Cherokee Chamber of Commerce and the Sheldon Commercial Club in cooperation with Iowa State college and several large beet sugar companies.

The work was started three years ago to demonstrate various features of the sugar industries and the possibilities of sugar beets as a commercial crop in northwestern Iowa. Iowa beet sugar was found to be equally as good as cane sugar for all cooking and canning purposes in the experiments conducted.

The work also showed that an application of 150 pounds of acid phosphate per acre, applied in the rows with the seed, returned over five times its value in increased yields. The increases averaged about three tons per acre. There was an increase of 11 percent in the number of plants on an acre with the same rate of seeding. This work seems to indicate that an even smaller amount of complete fertilizer would increase the yields to an even greater extent, Mr. Fitch says.

It was also found that it was best to thin when the plants were about 2 to 3 inches high.

Prof. Macy Campbell, head of the rural education department at the State Teachers College, Cedar Falls, whose death occurred while in attendance upon an educational meeting at Macon, Georgia, recently, was one of the outstanding agricultural economists in America. His recent book, "Rural Life at the Cross-Roads," met with tremendous favor. So thoroughly had he mastered the theory of co-operative marketing that he was chosen a member of a committee charged with the duty of preparing a text book for rural schools on that subject. Ex-Gov. Frank O. Lowden, of Illinois, was elected president of the committee and Prof. Campbell was chosen secretary and by common consent he was delegated to edit the text-book. He had given his best endeavors in the solution of rural problems. He visited various sections of the United States and on foot and alone called at farm homes, talked with farmers and their wives, ate with them and visited the rural schools in the neighborhood. In New England he selected farm homes in Maine, Vermon and Connecticut as illustrative of thatsection. He visited homes in the south, both in the cotton and tobacco region, and he called upon fruit growers and truck farmers in the Pacific coast states. Farm homes in Iowa and the middle west were given special attention. When at home he would arise at four o'clock in themorning , study and write until the family breakfast was prepared at 6 o'clock and then he would walk two or three miles to his work at the Teachers College. He was 47 years old at the time of his death. He was born on a farm near Pleasanton, Decatur county.

CONTRACTOR READY TO START WORK ON PRIMARY NO. 15

Will Work Three Miles At A Time

Improvement To Start On The South End Of Eight-Mile Stretch At No. 10

CLUB PROGRAM ON ROADS

An enjoyable and instructive program was given at the Luncheon Club meeting, Thursday, with Wallace Ramsay as chairman. The subject was Good Roads and their benefit to the community from a trading standpoint. Mr. Ramsay had prepared a map of the roads adjacent to Belmond, in the four different townships, Pleasant, Belmond, Iowa and Grant. It was conclusively pointed out and proven that Belmond has lost trade because of the poor condition, and often impassable condition of some of the secondary roads. Where it has been a matter of only one mile to a graveled road, trade has gone to other towns on account of that one mile of bad road. Mr. Griesy, E. F. Bailey, and Dr. McBurney spoke briefy of their experiences on some of the side roads, and their knowledge of their condition.

State Highway Engineer J. K. Hilton, formerly county engineer of Wright county, was present and joined in the discussion pertaining to Primary 15, the grading to be done this summer on 15 and possible detours. It is the plan of Mr. Fox, the contractor who has the grading contract, to begin at the junction of Primaries 15 and 10, eight miles south of Belmond. His crew will work north toward Belmond, doing the work in three-mile sections.

On the first three-mile section, traffic will probably be detoured one mile west on No. 10, thence north three miles and east one mile onto No. 15 again. In this three mile detour stretch there is a railroad crossing which is exceptionally dangerous and all motorists are especially warned to take unusual care at this point of the detour. After the first three-mile section of No. 15 has been graded, traffic will be permitted on the road for the three miles, when it will be detoured west again and north, coming out on No. 15 just north of the new bridge two miles south of Belmond. When the final two miles are being worked, traffic will be diverted thru Franklin grove past the Tyrrell farm.

Work has started on the improvement of Primary 15, and it is estimated will require about two and a half months to complete. Each section will require from three to four weeks to finish.

It will be worth the while of anyone to drive down to the new bridge two miles south of Belmond and watch the crew dig the new channel for the Iowa river. The course of the stream is being changed, and the new channel is being dug with a gasoline dredge. A real "mouthful" of soil is taken out with every dip of the bucket. A fleet of six Fordson tractors equipped with platforms for carrying dirt are being used to haul the soil taken from the new channel, to the grade south of the bridge. These tractors "run backwards," seemingly, that is, they have the large wheels in front, while the drivers sit on the side of the machine instead of in the center rear. The new grade of the road will run straight south, which necessitates filling up the present river bed. Operation of the dredge and tractors, and the dumping of their loads, is an interesting sight.

Former Teacher Married

Mrs. F. E. Snyder recently received the announcement of the marriage of Miss Ethel Jackson to Donald H. Vestal, June 15, at the home of her parents in Dunlap, Iowa. Miss Jackson taught in the Belmond schools two years in the third and fourth grades.

KLEMME WINS FROM GOODELL

In a pretty good game of baseball Sunday, Klemme won from Goodell, 5 to 4, on the Belmond diamond. The two teams were evenly matched and the game was close. Hamilton pitched for Goodell, doing nice work, while Klemme used two men on the mound in order to get the long end of the score. A fair-sized crowd was out to see the game, the first of the season on the local field. It is reported that other games are in prospect.

TO PAVE JEFFERSON IN 1928

An article in the Hampton Chronicle last week says a survey crew from the state highway commission has been working in Franklin county the past week getting the levels to which several points on federal highway No. 65—the Jefferson Highway—must be graded before paving work can be started. The Chronicle quotes the county engineer as saying contracts will be let for having the grading completed this fall. The whole road thru Franklin county will be paved next year, according to this article, the work being let in several different sections to different contractors, so that the entire road can be paved in one year.

ST. OLAF SENDS DELEGATE

Elias Eliason and daughter, Nora, and Miss Gladys Eliason of Norway township, left Tuesday morning for Eeattle, Washington, and other western points. Miss Gladys Eliason will attend the Luther League convention of the Norwegian Lutheran church, which is to be held at Seattle June 25 to 30, inclusive, as a delegate from St. Olaf Luther League. Rev. B. Guldseth has this charge. They expect to visit Vancouver, Calgary and Winnepeg, Canada, on their return trip.

15,000 ACRES BEETS REPORTED

From Mason City comes the report that there will be grown in that section of the state the largest acreage of sugar beets in the history of the industry. More than 15,000 acres have been contracted for by the American Sugar Corporation, whose officers state the ground is in the best condition it has been for four years. More of the better farmers than ever are taking to beet growing, it was stated. It is probable that the factory at Belmond will not operate this season, pending a settlement of financial difficulties, and the sugar factory at Mason City will handle the acreage of that entire section of the state.

WOLVES GETTING NUMEROUS

Wolves are more numerous in southwestern Iowa than in many years. Wolf hunting with packs of hounds is a common pastime in Page county, and results are secured. But the most extensive business has been done in the office of the auditor in Adams county in the paying of bounties, $204 having been paid in two days. Robert Archie, of Corning, tells how it was done. On a Tuesday, R. L. Gourley brought in the first litter of cubs, six in all. F. H. Young found two litters of different ages occupying the same home. There were ten in this bunch. C. H. Harvey contributed seven cubs to the collection and S. M. Richey seven more with the mother. E. E. Bassett brought in a full grown animal and J. F. Gentry and son eight more cubs. Wednesday C. D. Flowers brought in eight cubs and turned them in at the auditor's office.

Miss Carol Tyrrell returned last Wednesday from Boston, where she has been attending New England Conservatory of Music. Mrs. Tyrrell, who had been spending the past five weeks with her daughter, returned with her by way of Geneva, where they attended graduation exercises. David returned with them from there.

Former Residents Of County In First Of Picnic Meetings

A gathering of former Wright county residents, who are now living in Des Moines, was held at Union Park Sunday afternoon, June 19, according to an item in the Clarion Monitor. In Audubon county William Jones lost seventeen head of cattle caused by excessive bleeding from dehorning. Mr. Jones has been feeding these cattle sweet clover hay all winter which the veterinary claims put the blood in such condition as to be impossible to stop the bleeding. OBITUARY

Muriel LaNora Amblie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Peter N. Amblie, passed away at the Fairview hospital, Minneapolis, Sunday, June 19th.

Muriel was born at Belmond October 28, 1908. She attended our public schools and grew from childhood to youth in our midst. About two years ago she moved with her parents to Minneapolis, Minn. At the time of her death Muriel was eighteen years, seven months and three weeks old. About four months ago she suffered from an attack of influenze, but the immediate cause of her death, however, was peritonitis, from which she suffered greatly toward the last. Throughout her sickness and suffering she displayed a remarkable patience. She was conscious of her condition, prepared to depart and sought to the very last to cheer her beloved ones. Mourning her departure are her parents, four sisters and three brothers: Mrs. C. J. Nelson, of Eagle Grove; Mrs. C. J. Johnson and Chester, of Fort Dodge; Esther, Adaline and Harris, of Minneapolis, and Philmore, of Hope, Idaho.

Two sisters and one brother have passed on before her. The funeral was held yesterday at Trinity Lutheran church. Interment took place in the Belmond cemetery.

IOWAN FINDS EGYPTIAN COIN

Justin Barry, of Cherokee, relates an unusual find in that county, on the D. W. McNeal farm. The tenant picked up an Egyptian coin out of the sand on the banks of the Little Sioux river. The coin is of brass and is an inch and a quarter in diameter and very thin. On the face is the Sphinx, the rising sun, the great pyramid, three smaller pyramids and the date, which being in Egyptian has not been diciphered. The reverse shows an Egyptian deity having two horns supporting a globe (the world). The deity is guarded by two lions and on either side are inscriptions in Egyptian, easily decipherable by one familiar wth the hierglyphics.

SEEK TO COLLECT 1898 FINE

In 1898 a man doing business at Brazil, in Appanoose county, was brought into court and tried by Judge Fee on a charge of maintaining a liquor nuisance. It seems to have been an aggravated case and the judge assessed a fine of $1,000. The fine was never collected, probably because the defendant was judgment proof. Just recently the man died leaving a small property and the authorities of Appanoose county levied upon the property for the amount of the judgment plus six percent interest for twenty-nine years.

AN INDEPENDENT NEWSPAPER

Editorials

In last week's issues we noticed in a number of the exchanges that come to our desk, a small ad for a summer resort. Along with the ad was a "free" reader, a "news" item which was publicity, advertising, pure and simple for the resort. The ad amounted to two dollars; the free reader, at regular line rates, ran to around $3.00. If the newspapers wished to donate $3.00 worth of space for the sake of obtaining $2.00 in paid space we suppose they have that privilege. But we call it poor business, and still worse management. If they have space to give away, donating it locally will help them and their town more. The idea, however, is that the country is lousy with similar free advertising grafters, and papers who fall for their stuff and give it space are injuring themselves and the profession. You cannot expect a person to pay for something when he can get it for nothing. The fellows who put out this free publicity draw down a fat salary—and the papers who print it pay the salary. If the agent who sends it out didn't get results he would soon lose his job. And—here is the point—if the concern who pays this agent didn't get their advertising run for nothing, they would pay the papers instead of the publicity agent.

We note that two of our exchanges are engaged in a wordy war regarding the ultimate fate of the small-town paper, one contending that the time is fact approaching when there will be no local papers in the smaller communities and not more than one in towns up to 5,000 people.

A contemporary takes issue with the brother publisher, and compares the average country paper of today with that of twenty years ago. Not only have the business methods been transformed, but modern machinery has placed the small-town publishing business on an entirely different basis.

To a certain extent we believe both the writers are correct. Statistics bear out the first editor in the diminishing number of country weeklies and it is no more than reasonable to assume that the small-town paper will be placed in the same category as other lines of business; in other words it will be a survival of the fittest.

If the small-town and its business institutions continue to give the kind of service that commands and holds trade it will always have a representative means of publicity. If the merchants of these communities do not keep up with the trend of the times and adopt modern merchandising methods, naturally there will be no incentive for a home-town paper to exist, or the patronage to justify its existence.

There are scores of country editors who in the last few years have allowed their papers to get in a rut along with other lines of business until now they have little or no value either as a news or advertising medium.

So, on the whole, the problem of the small-town weekly rests primarily with the kind of merchants it has to work with. Initiative and ability, clean stocks and courteous service, together with consistent advertising, will hold the major portion of trade at home. These kinds of stores will always be reflected by a newsy, well-conducted local paper, that will prove a credit to the community and a source of prosperity to its publisher.—LaCrosse (Wash.) Clipper.

COLLECTORS SEEKING DELINQUENT SUBSCRIPTIONS

LuVerne News: "We understand that several of the newspapers and some of the other business firms in this part of Iowa have men out in the field doing collecting for them. Several of the Humboldt papers, co-operating with some of the merchants of the various towns, have had collectors out the past few weeks, and the same crew will be gin operating in this territory the last of the week. The News has given the workers a list of delinquents and if your subscription is not paid up to date you may expect a call most any day the latter part of this week or next. Every business man deeply regrets placing his accounts in the hands of collectors but when people continually refuse or neglect to pay any attention to statements or other forms or requests for settlement of accounts some strenuous measures must be adopted. A lot of business firms hardly take in enough cash to pay their weekly or monthly expense accounts."

There will be no collectors out endeavoring to collect for the Independent. If the News, and the other papers it speaks of would run their subscriptions in a businesslike way, as the dailies do—in advance—there would be no need of collectors.

Meritorious service for 38 years is the record of the Iowa Children's Home Society, Des Moines. Miss Laura Taft, state superintendent has recently published the annual report, showing in brief the progress of the Home and the changes in policy that have evolved during the past few years, in keeping with nation-wide changes in progressive child care. Since its organization in 1888, the Home has placed more than 6,000 children in the finest homes in Iowa. In the earlier years, says Miss Taft, it was customary to assemble orphans and sometimes even "half-orphans" in "orphanages," or "orphan asylums," where the dependent child remained for weeks, months, sometimes even for years, without any hope of achieving a future in keeping with personal needs. Now all that is changed. In common with the great eastern Child Caring agencies that have for years past tried and proved the value of a child caring policy based on the individual needs of the child, the Society is placing the emphasis on the work with the unmarried mother, and on carefully selected supervised private boarding homes for the individual children. The Home receives no funds from state or county. It receives certain amounts from the Public Welfare Bureau, of which it is a participating unit. It has also a small endowment, but depends for support largely on voluntory contributions from philanthropic citizens throughout the state. Prof. Frank I. Herriott, member of the faculty of Drake university is president; Hon. Shirley Gilliland of Glenwood, vice-president, and Mrs. C. H. Morris, member of the Des Moines city council secretary and Ivan Hasbrouck, of Jefferson, treasurer.

GRACEFUL EATING

How to handle one's knife, fork and spoon is sometimes a problem to one who has given little thought to it. In England, one holds the knife in the right hand and the fork in the left. In the United States one-handed eating is the rule. We use the knife only in spreading bread or in cutting food and we lay it across the plate, midway between the outer edge and the center of the plate, when not in use.

We hold the work in the left hand only when we are using the knife in the right for cutting. When we lay the knife down, we transfer the work ti the right hand and eat with it. When not in use we lay the fork beside the knife, on the plate. When eating, we hold the fork daintily, with the prongs up. The little finger curls under the work and does not stick out at an affected angle. This rule applies when holding the spoon or cup in the hand.

When we do not know whether to use the fork or the spoon for any dish, we can take our cue from our hostess, waiting to observe which piece of silver she uses for it.

The napkin is not completely unfolded upon the lap, but laid across it folded in half. At the close of the meal it is carefully folded ond placed beside the plate, if one expects to eat another meal at that table. If not, it is left unfolded beside the plate. If finger bowls are used, one dips the finger tips lightly into them, one hand at a time, and wipes them on the napkin. It is permissible to touch the lips lightly with the wet finger tips, but too ostensible washing of the lips looks too much like a bath, and is hardly dainty.

BUILT-IN IRONING BOARD

One housewife likes to iron in her bedroom, rather than in her kitchen, because she can strew the freshly ironed clothes there until dry without mussing them or get them soiled when she gets a meal. She thinks the bedroom a natural place in which to do the ironing, and her large, airy bedroom is a more pleasant place in which to spend a few hours at this hot work, than is the small kitchen.

This housewife has had her ironing board fastened with hinges on the inside of the closet door. When not in use, the board is folded against the door and fastened in place by means of a little dog chain which snaps into a screw eye on the door. When the ironing board is let down for use, it is made firm by means of a prop which is hinged to the outer end of it and which braces back against the door when the board is in use. It folds up against the board when not in use.

When ironing, our ingenuous housewife sits on one side of those little step-ladder chairs, with her feet resting on the bottom step. It is your feet which get tired in ironing," she says. "Resting comfortable on the bottom step of my step-ladder they do not get hot and swollen. I can sit here for hours and iron and think and listen to the birds; and do not care if I have to do my ironing in the afternoon because it is not kitchen drudgery, but real lady-like sitting-down work in a pleasant room."

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

When about to stir up a cake, first read the recipe and then assembly all the necessary utensils and ingredients before you begin mixing the cake.

When pressing the creases in trousers lay a damp cloth over them and iron until it is thoroughly dry.

To make gathers on the sewing machine, loosen the tension of the thread and make the stitches long. Stitch as usual and then pull the under thread to make the fullness.

The yolks of two eggs, rather than one whole egg, make a better salad dressing. To the egg yolks, add salt, pepper, olive oil and lemon juice.

Greens should be washed, cooked and served as soon as possible after they have been gathered. To steam them, preserves the mineral salts, or boil them in just enough water to prevent burning.

Once a week, wash the coffee and tea pot in water in which borax or soda has been dissolved.

DINING ROOMS

Except in the spacious and imposing home, the dining room, once the center of family activities, has shrunk in importance and in size. People began eating in the kitchen long ago—nice people, too—to save Mother steps and because Father was in a hurry to snatch a bite and run.

Now they are graduating from the kitchen into the breakfast nook, which is becoming "the dining alcove" for three meals a day in many homes. Thes pace once devoted to the dining room is now serving as library or sewing room, has disappeared altogether, or gone to the enlargement of the living room. On those state occasions when one has a large company, small card tables, scattered all over the premises, take care of the guests. For the family home-coming dinner, the living room is not too formal a place in which to stretch out the festive board.

COOL DRINKS

It is a good plan to keep in the refrigerator a can of sirup ready to mix in cold beverages. Such a sirup may be made by boiling, for six minutes, four cups of sugar ond two of water.

SANDWICHES

RUNNY FROSTING

If the frosting on your cake will not get firm, put the cake into the oven for a minute until the frosting sets.

THE WORLD'S GREAT EVENTS

Louis XIV

"I AM the state."

The man who said this threw a tremendous accent on the "I." It was a way he had. He went on the theory that he and his personal longings, ambitions and glories were the only things on earth to be considered.

Yet this conceited little man in the big wig was the greatest sovereign of his day. For he was the "Grand Monarch," Louis XIV, king of France.

Richelieu, the cardinal and prime minister, who had done so much for France, and incidentally for himself, was dead. And Louis XIII had died soon after his minister, leaving the throne to his five-year-old son, Louis XIV. Cardinal Mazarin had succeeded Richelieu as prime minister, and managed to embroil France in foreign wars and domestic revolts. He was a miser and forced the boy king to sleep in dirty, tattered sheets and to practice other humiliating petty economies. Fouquet, the minister of finance, took advantage of the unsettled state of the court to rob the royal exchequer. Other abuses flourished unhindered.

Hence, when Mazarin died, in 1661, the twenty-three-year-old Louis decided he had had enough of ministers. When asked to whom various matters of state were henceforth to be referred, he replied: "To me!" Henceforth he reigned as an absolute dictator. France was wrecked by war, discontent and hard times. The treasury was in bad condition. The young monarch found his position no sinecure.

He set to work at once to build up the country, without and within.

At once the Golden age or France be- ... By 1678, Louis was ... lord to be the ... ... Hi... Indu... art flo... before. cence was Among the ... lustre to Louis tal names to pos dramatists Moliere, neille; the painters, and Lebrun; the arch... and the preacher, Bossu... armies won everywhere b... tories and France's fame an... its king were world-wide.

Louis' personal character was out of keeping with all this greatn... A man of notoriously bad morals, h... was also intolerably vain, arrogant and self-centered. The man who plans only for his own glory can win no permanent success. And so it proved with the grand monarch. He outlived his greatness. As the years went on the men of genius who had contributed so largely to his success began to die off. None of equal mentality replaced them. The beautiful and wicked women who in turn had swayed the court were now only old and wicked. The grand monarch himself was feeling and showing the marks of age and of the life he had led. Nor were his country's affairs in less decadent condition. By an unjust and idiotic act of his own Louis hastened the downfall of the supremacy he had achieved.

Mme. de Maintenon, a woman of intensely religious tendencies but of narrow, limited intellect, attracted the old king's fancy. He secretly married her. Thereafter her influence over him was boundless. At her wish the gay court grew sombre and stupid. The king devoted to piety the hours that had formerly been given to pleasrure. Then, at his wife's urgent plea, he revoked the edict of Nantes. This edict, established by Henry IV, granted religious freedom and many other privileges to the Huguenots (Protestants) throughout France. Its revocation threw the country into panic. By thousands the Huguenots emigrated to Holland, England and America. France suffered incalculable injury from the wholesale departure of these ill-treated people.

Holland, Germany and Spain formed an alliance against France, and Louis learned most keenly that his power was on the wane. Then came the crushing blow of his whole life, in the famous war of the Spanish succession. The king of Spain, dying, bequeathed his throne to the duke of Anjou, Louis' grandson. This, a crowning result of Louis' diplomacy, threatened to unite the kingdoms of France and Spain. But the Archduke Charles disputed Anjou's claim; and Germany, Holland and England, espousing the archduke's cause, combined against Louis. In battle after battle the allies defeated the grand monarch's armies, until, by 1713, France was beaten and humiliated and glad to sue for peace. Here Louis' old-time genius flared up for the moment; for only his statecraft and policy saved his country from dismemberment at this critical moment.

On September 1, 1719, in his seventy-seventh year, Louis XIV died. His greatness had died long before him. He lived to see his country humbled and disgraced through his follies, to see the plain people overburdened and oppressed by taxes to pay for his extravagances; to witness the death of his son and grandson, and to know that the era of panic and semi-anarchy which was at hand was due to his own mistakes and sins. Surely a tolerably severe lesson in the folly of living wholly for one's self and for personal glory.

FREE AIR

Well, we notice Cal. is catching his daily allotment of trout as was promised him if he would come west. And they seem to be just as good fish as they have in the east, at that.

* * * *

Cal is a pretty good fisherman, but then he ought to be. He's been fishing for quite a spell now, and these South Dakota trout aren't the only western fish he has hooked—if you get our meaning.

* * * *

It must make the South Dakota fish sort of stick up their fins at the Minnesota pike, to be caught by such an illustrous angler and have themselves spread all over the front page of the city dailies.

* * * *

Wouldn't wonder if some green fish were pulled out up at Dad Ingalls' and Frank Baldridge's—turned green from envy.

* * * *

Think of a poor fish having to be caught by Dad Ingalls or Si Packard, to say nothing of Pink Trees or Nate Benson or Dell Luick, and getting nothing but a brief mention in Free Air, when said fish might have been hooked by the President and had all kinds of front page publicity in the New York Times and the Washington Post!

* * * *

* * * *

Wouldn't wonder if that wasn't the reason we had such poor luck.

* * * *

Probably the main reason why Cal went to South Dakota instead of ... was that South Da... has most... ...ve a ...l to sal... ...y. Lots of ... been suggest... ...em tried out, but ... We have an idea— ...al—which has never ...sted before to the best of ... ...wledge and belief, and we wou... like to offer it for the consideration of all concerned. There are some points in our suggestion which may be debatable, and would have to be ironed out, but on the whole if accomplished it would please many, and unquestionably would be immediately financially successful. Possibly it may be too late to put our suggestion into effect—that depends largely upon whom you discuss the matter with, and the viewpoint they take on the matter—but we offer it just the same, gratis, free for nothin', no charge, and guarantee it to be as satisfactory, sound, plausible and possible as some others that have been put forward. To put Belmond's sugar factory back on its feet and make it an immediate financial success, all we need to do is—

Repeal the Prohibition law and turn the factory into a brewery!

In seclusion in New York recently occurred the death of Eldon C. DeWitt. His name had not appeared in New York newspapers before since 1895, and yet he left an estate of $85,000,000. Years ago DeWitt failed in the drug business at Elk Point, S. D. He shipped a carload of his belonging to Sioux City, intending to reship them to his home in Wyoming, Iowa. When the freight reached Sioux City one of his creditors, a Sioux City business man, attached them for a sum due him. Charles Beggs, of Elk Point, heard of DeWitt's difficulties, and, coming to Sioux City, paid the latter's bills and entered business with him. This was the turning point in the career of the millionaire. The manufacture of patent medicines began on a small scale in Sioux City. One day a happy idea struck DeWitt when he coined a slogan for a newly patented pill, "DeWitt's Little Early Risers," and his fortune was made. He opened a medicine factory in New York and soon in London and other European cities. Upon his death he left his great fortune to his widow, Mrs. Cora E. DeWitt whom he had married in his early days at Wyoming, Jones county, whose official title in the business is given as vice-president.

WOULD CORN SUBSTITUTE PAY?

With corn prices climbing of late and hog prices going to the lowest point in the past three or four years many Iowa farmers are pondering the possibility of substituting other feeds for apart o f the corn to fatten hogs. But judging from experiments carried on at the Iowa Agricultural Experiment Station, Ames, less rapid gains and more feed per unit of gain frequently result where other feeds are used. Whether or not other feeds can be used profitably depends on the comparative prices.

In order to determine the advisability of substituting for corn in the fattening pig ration, John M. Evvard and his co-workers at Ames conducted a feeding test with four lots of pigs on bluegrass pasture. The lots were fed from self-feeders on the following rations· 60 percent meat meal tankage, self-fed; salt, self-fed; and blue grass pasture. Lot 2 was fed the same as Lot 1 except that hominy feed was used in the place of corn. Lot 3 was also fed the same as Lot 1, except that oat meal, a finely ground byproduct of oatmeal manufacture, not including hulls, was used. Lot 4 was fed the same as Lot 1, except that standard wheat middlings was fed in place of the corn.

A summary of the work showed that it required 143 days for the corn fed pigs to reach a weight of 225 pounds from an original weight of 49 pounds. With the same starting weight, it required 154 days for the hominy fed pigs to reach 225 pounds; 189 days for the oat meal fed pigs, and 225 days for the wheat middlings lot.

The total amount of feed required by each lot per hundred pounds of gain was as follows: 363 punds of corn in Lot 1; 397 pounds of hominy in Lot 2; 401 pounds of oat meal in Lot 3, and 572 pounds of wheat middlings in Lot 4.

On this basis and knowing the price of these various feeds, the farmer can determine for himself the advisability of substituting any of these feeds for corn in the ration.

These figures do not mean, however, according to Mr. Evvard, that some of these substitutes cannot be used economically as a partial substitute for corn. The results of further investigations along the same lines by the Iowa Experiment Station showed that oat meal is more valuable as a substitute on rape pasture than on bluegrass pasture, especially for smaller pigs. Wheat middlings also proved to be better adapted as a substitute on rape than on bluegrass.

Barley or oats may sometimes be substituted for corn with good results.

FEEDS 40 HEAD ON 15 ACRES

With but 15 acres of alfalfa last year, Joe Raudabaugh, of Traer, a Tama county farmer, secured enough hay for 40 head of cattle, and, in addition, sold 20 tons for $20 a ton.

Mr. Raudabaugh is a dairyman, a member of the Tama County Cow Testing Association, and 20 of his 40 head of cattle were milk cows. His alfalfa consisted of 10 acres of a two-year-old seeding. He secured three cuttings from the old piece an dtwo cuttings from the new seeding. The crop averaged 4 1-2 tons an acre.

Before seeding the alfalfa, Mr. Raudabaugh applied 2 tons of limestone per acre and inoculated the seed. He has never cultivated his alfalfa, but expects to disc it when the crop is taken off this year.

Not only does Mr. Raudabaugh depend on alfalfa, but he also is an enthusiast for other legumes. He produced enough soybean seed last year so that the only protein concentrates he had to buy to balance up his dairy ration were two tons of cottonseed meal. He also has 20 acres of sweet clover pasture.

DUST THE CUCUMBER BEETLE

The control of the cucumber beetle is an annual problem confronting the gardener and truck farmer about this season. C. V. Holsinger, extension horticulturist, Iowa State College, Ames, suggests some simple control measures.

These beetles can be controlled by spraying or dusting, he says, and advocates the latter method for small gardens. Care should be taken not to burn the foliage, however, and in order to insure that this will not occur, Mr. Holsinger recommends the use of gypsum instead of air slaked lime in preparing the dusting material. The formula which he recommends is 1 part powdered arsenate of lead to 20 parts gypsum. To this he recommends adding 1 tablespoonful of nicotine sulfate to each 5 to 10 pounds of powder. This mixture can be applied by dusting with a small duster or with the hands, applying on the foliage with a small amount around the stem of the plant at the base.

Professor Holsinger cites a case in his own garden in which there were no beetles on the cucumber plants on Tuesday, but upon inspecting the plants two days later he found as many as 50 beetles on each hill. Since he had no air slaked lime or gypsum on hand, he sifted wood ashes, getting a fine powder, which he mixed in the same proportion as tho he had used gypsum. The following morning scarcely a beetle could be found.

Investigational work has shown, Mr. Holsinger says, that in addition to the damage that the cucumber beetle does while the plants are young and beginning their growth, this pest spreads the disease known as cucumber wilt, by biting into infected plants and then later into uninfected plants. This disease causes the plants to wilt or die within a very few days from the time the infection first appears, and occurs about the time that the first cucumbers set, Mr. Holsinger states.

Iowa Farm Manure Worth Millions

Over 95 million tons of manure are produced on the farms of Iowa annually and if applied to the land without loss would mean many millions of dollars' worth of fertility added to the soils, according to W. H. Stevenson, head of the soils work at Iowa State College. Experiments carried on thruout Iowa showed that the average value of a ton of manure as measured by the crop increases it brought about was $1.97. This would give the annual manure produced in Iowa a total value of nearly 200 million dollars.

DISCUSS DRESS MATERIALS.

What kind of material for the summer dress? The range of choice is wide, according to Miss Mary Gabrielson, home economics teacher at Iowa State College. Her discussion of the various materials follows:

"Voile is cool, inexpensive and does not wrinkle or soil quickly. The main objection to voile is that because it is so transparent, it requires a special slip to be worn under it. Voiles come in all colors, ranging from the delicate, soft, pastel shades down to the dark colors, and in beautiful all-over designs. Voiles range in price from 75c to $2.00 a yard.

"If one wishes to spend more money for the summer dress, a printed crepe de chine or a wash silk is practical, requiring little pressing, can be worn, if careful, for a long time without laundering, and is very easily laundered. The price for such material is about $3.00. It is usually 40 inches in width.

"For a more tailored type of garment, cotton broadcloth is a popular material. It is fine, firmly woven, and may be had in plain colors or in very attractive prints, ranging in price from 70c to $1.50 per yard. In the better quality, it is so highly mercerized that it is quite silk-like in appearance. It launders easly and in the good quality, keeps its color well.

"Linens are always good for the more tailored dress, but need frequent pressing. They are priced from $1.00 to $2.00 per yard. For the tailored type in silks, the Shantung silks are desirable. They are especially adapted to the sports type of costume and, in the light colors, are washable.

"Ginghams are staple materials for both house and street wear. For the street dress, the finer French ginghams are more suitable. The finer ginghams cost 45 to 50c per yard.

"The English prints make most attractive and inexpensive dresses, and launder beautifully if one purchases the fast color prints. They come in a great variety of coloring and patterns and are priced at about 50c per yard.

"Rayon or artificial silk fabrics are highly lustrous and have the appearance of silk, but their practicability as washable fabrics has not been satisfctorily proved. It is wise to test a sample by washing before purchasing. A mixture of rayon with cotton or silk makes a stronger fabric.

"Cotton crepes are excellent for their non-crushable qualities and ease of laundering, but they feel warm and clingy on a hot day. The crepes, which are a mixture of cotton and silk or cotton and rayon, are better in this respect."

Give Shade, Water—They're Cheap

Egg yields in summer and the growth of young chicks sometimes are not what they should be merely because two of the cheapest essentials—shade and plenty of clean, fresh water—are not provided. So assert the poultry specialists of Iowa State College. They say that denying water or forcing the flock to suffer in the hot sun will check profits just as quickly as improper feeding.

College Owns Many "Movies"

About 1,800 reels of motion picture films and 175 sets of stereopticon slides are owned by the Visual Instruction Service of Iowa State College and are for the purpose of loaning to schools, churches, county farm bureaus and all non-theatrical instiutions of the state. Last year some of these were loaned in every county of the state except two. These furnished 7,748 prgrams, which were attended by 679,618 people.

TABLES

The tables are turned to many uses in the home of today. They break up the stiffness of arrangement, give a touch of coziness, and fit well into the small house.

Beside the easy chair, is the end table for magazines, while the book trough serves as a shelf underneath. The folding table sits at the head of the davenport ready to hold table lamp or books. The console table stands against the wall, beneath the large mirror or under the tapestry strip. Upon it are two tall candlesticks.

Nesting tables have a virtue all their own in that they can so easily be disposed of when not needed and can serve so many purposes upon demand. The black and gold lacquer ones are no more expensive than plain walnuts and have a gay and distinguished appearance.

Besides these there is a wide variety of tables of many shapes and uses: the tea table or coffee table which is low and may be set in front of the hostess anywhere, the table formed of a tray fitted on legs and which is collapsible when not in use, the long and narrow davenport, the tiny table made to hold the smoking set, the telephone table, the sewing table and tables which seem to have no use at all unless it be as ornaments.

FRUIT LAXATIVE

The following fruit laxative is mild and effective and will keep through warm weather, if sealed and protected from the infestation of insects.

Grind ten cents worth of senna leaves, through the fine grinder of the food chopper, until they are almost a powder. Then grind through a coarser chopper one pound each of figs, dates, and raisins, sprinkling the senna powder through it as you grind. It is hard to mix the senna powder through if you do not put it in as you grind the fruit. Knead the mass as you would knead a bread dough. Cut in squares about a teaspoonful to a square and make into balls. It may be rolled in powdered sugar if one wishes. One of these, taken each night, will prove helpful to a person who leads an inactive or sedentary life and who is inclined to sluggishness.

Busy smokers of today select Camel as their favorite smoke
PRESENT-DAY people, the fastest workers of all time, claim their right to enjoyment. And they choose Camels for the utmost in smoking pleasure.
Camel is made to please and delight the modern, experienced smoker. It is rolled of the choicest tobaccos grown. It is matchlessly blended for mildness and fragrance in the smoking.
Let Camels demonstrate their goodness and you'll know why the smokers of today choose them over all other cigarettes. For that exalted sense of taste-satisfaction, no other smoke can compare with this one. "Have a Camel!"

Charge for Small Checking Accounts

For a long time we did not believe the small checking accounts were so numerous; or that our loss with them was as large as it is.

In checking our books we find 290 checking accounts with a balance of less than $50.00 each. The total balance of these accounts is $3,245.00. One-half of the checks we handle each day are drawn on these accounts.

Clerical expense and cost of Checks, Pass Books, Ledger Supplies, etc., have increased to such an extent that we are compelled to make a small charge.

Beginning with July 1st, 1927, a charge of 50 cents per month will be made on checking accounts that have a minimum balance of less than $25.00. This, however, would not apply to accounts of religious societies, lodges, schools and the like; or, when not more than three checks per month are charged against the account.

On checks that are returned for "want of funds" a charge of 25 cents per check will be made.

If you have to borrow $25.00, it would cost you $2.00 per year, which is very cheap for the benefits derived from a checking account.

With the above arrangement, we believe that most of the costs incurred with these smaller accounts will be paid by those who find checking accounts an advantage.

The 50 cent charge has not been instituted with the idea of collecting this charge, but to induce a balance of over $25.00.

The approximate cost of the building, built a few years ago, was $7,000 and the estimated loss is from $40,000 to $50,000. The Splinters

"Every Splinter Has A Point"

Vol. 2 Thursday, June 23, 1927 No. 10

Published in the Interests of the People of Belmond and Vicinity by the GREENLANDER LUMBER COMPANY.

Every year, along about this time, we meet the fellow who asks us, "Is it hot enough for you?"

Ever hear about the fellow who quit smoking because he was getting a tobacco heart? Well, he began eating candy and now he has a sweetheart.

An Iowa man was trying to sell a horse. The animal was beautiful, but wind-broken. "Hasn't he a beautiful coat?" exclaimed the owner. "Yes," replied the buyer, "but I don't like his pants."

"Yeah! That's what the fellow who does your repairing just told me."

You might just as well have a good fence as a poor one. The good one actually is easier built than the poor one, and in the main, costs no more. If you are planning some new fence, come in and talk with us. Just received a car load of American fence.

The street was thronged with thousands of hurrying pedestrians. Suddenly a woman's cry rose shrilly above the noise of the passing throngs. "Give me air!" she shrieked. The crowds gasped and stood aside. Then a woman triumphantly drove her car, with one flat tire, into the filling station.

Soda fountains, talcum powder and perfumed soaps are now having their inning.

Every year brings its hardships to the people of this community. We know some who have been hit hard by reverses during the past three or four years. But you don't hear many complaints. Most people are going right ahead with their plans, buying what they need, and looking into the future with confidence and enthusiasm.

Kinseth's Store News

What would you do if you could get hold of the fellow who wrote "It Ain't Gonna Rain No More"?

That's just what we think about it. We haven't any umbrellas to sell, but we have got some dandy bargains this week in canned fruits in gallon lots.

No. 10 gallon fruits are being sold this week at the following prices in the fruits named:

Bartlett Pears	86c
Logan Berries	86c
Blackberries	84c
Fresh Prunes	49c

Then there's the large style Hominy at 9c a can. Some folks don't like hominy, but for those who do this is a bargain that will appeal.

Ladies' honor tex silk hosiery in all colors at 69c.

Some silk stockings at the best bargain price of 49c while they last.

When you need groceries, phone 5 or 19 and we'll get them to you if we have to use a boat. That's the number of the Store on the Corner.

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I.—Garth Guthrie, Canadian war veteran, having to live in the open on account of weakened lungs, is factor of a Hudson's Bay post at Elkwan. He came back from the conflict with a permanently scarred face, which he realizes cost him the love of his fiancee, Edith Falconer. Sir Charles Guthrie, his brother, is a millionaire war profiteer.

CHAPTER II.—With Etienne Savanne, halfbreed, his firm friend, Garth meets Doctor Quarrier, geologist, and his sister Joan. Their schooner has drifted ashore. Quarrier complains he has been robbed by a man known as "Laughing McDonald" or to the Indians as "McDonald Ha! Ha!" because of a scar which gives him a perpetual grin. McDonald is Garth's competitor for the fur trade. At Elkwan an Indian girl, Ninda, tuberculosis victim, whom Garth has befriended, is dying. Quarrier hints that Ninda is Garth's mistress, which is hotly resented. Joan, trained war nurse, cares for Ninda, but the girl dies.

"Keep in touch? How're you going to cross that strait before January? It'll be full of drifting ice."

"The ice won't be set hard, but we intend to make it with a canoe on our sled. We'll carry the sled in the canoe or the canoe on the sled, as the conditions change."

"Risky—that's a bad piece of water. I've seen the ice set and break up again three times before January. And when you get there, how're you going to keep them away from his schooner?"

"We'll make a try, anyway," replied Guthrie. "Etienne and I don't intend to let our share of the trade slip through our fingers by hugging the fire at Elkwan."

"Well, good luck to you!" sighed the old trader. "Since the French company came to the bay, the Indians have forgotten the years we kept them from starving. They're out of hand now. Do what you can."

For a space Cameron seemed to dream of the past glories of the company he served, then suddenly asked: "You know what he did in August?"

"No."

"Why, he sailed into Charlton island and tried to buy gas and flour at the depot. McMann laughed at him, of course; but that red-headed freebooter coolly announced that when he needed it, he would come and take it—said if we wouldn't sell it to him, he had government authority to seize it."

"He was right there; Ottawa's made that ruling, you know," suggested Blaikie, Cameron's clerk.

"Yes, they've made the ruling," rasped Cameron, "but do you think he'd get supplies from me when he's come into the bay to rob us of the trade?" The columns of smoke that the factor blew from his mouth were the measure of his irritation.

"Oh, by the way, Guthrie," asked Blaikie, with seeming innocence, "what was your trouble with this puffy old boy, Quarrier, you brought here today?"

Alive to the fact that the story of Ninda and his summary handling of the geologist had received due embellishment when Quarrier met Cameron on the arrival of the York boat, Guthrie suspected the motives of the clerk, and he had no intention of discussing the Quarrier episode or of subjecting the memory of the dead girl to the comment of a stranger.

"I've made my report to Mr. Cameron," he said with finality. "You heard Quarrier tell his story this afternoon. What are you after?"

Blaikie choked with anger, but the scarred cheek and the war record which had followed Guthrie to James bay in a letter from the Montreal headquarters of the company had made its marked impression at Albany. The clerk retreated behind a cloud of pipe smoke.

"Now, since that's settled," said Cameron, loudly clearing his throat and meeting Guthrie's look with a wink, "let's get back to business. Where do you suppose this McDonald gets his backing?"

"There are plenty of people in Newfoundland who'd back him after the haul he made last year on the east coast."

"He's going to be a thorn in our side, Guthrie. He's no ordinary chap; he's got nerve and ability. Queer thing happened when he came into Charlton. One of the half-breeds there stared at that face of his and laughed. McDonald grabbed the Indian by the throat and shook him like a rabbit; then roared: 'Laugh, d—n you! It's funny, is it? A thousand Canadians died the day I got that!'"

Profoundly stirred, Guthrie's sympathy went out to this stranger with the twisted mouth. What raw torture, what secret agony must have been his—facing the world with a grimace! How well he sensed the impotent fury—the bitterness of this man, doomed to the pitiless stares—the callous curiosity of the rabble.

"I wonder what day that was," queried Guthrie, aloud, unaware that his fingers touched the cicatrix on his cheek.

"If he'd only do something illegal," Cameron hastened to say, "the company could run him out of the bay."

There was a glint, frankly combative, in Garth Guthrie's eyes as he heard the future of a Canadian veteran so cavalierly disposed of.

"That might not be so easy. From what the Indians say, he carries Lewis guns. Do you know any of our people who would relish meeting Laughing McDonald at the butt end of a machine gun?"

"He wouldn't dare fight us—shed blood on this bay!"

"Cameron," said Guthrie, and the glitter returned to his eyes, "I'm inclined to think that the company had better avoid any attempt at force with an overseas man with a mutilated mouth. He's apt to run amuck—to forget the war's over."

As he studied Guthrie's brooding eyes, Cameron knotted his thick brows, vaguely aware that the scar on the face of the speaker had prompted the remark.

"Well, however that may be, he's a dangerous competitor. After dropping that scared company Indian like a bag of salt, according to McMann, he asked if there were any more slackers who wanted to laugh at the kiss of a Hun shell—There weren't any!"

Guthrie smiled, his thoughts colored by memories.

Later, by the light of a candle in the small room assigned to him by the factor, Garth re-read two letters he had found waiting at the post. The letter of his brother, dictated to his secretary, and typewritten, expressed extreme shock at the failure of the wanderer to return; deplored his indifference to the future of the Guthrie Steel company and to his own; condemned his callous and shabby treatment of the lovely girl who worshiped him; had grown floridly eloquent in its emphasis of the distinction lately conferred on the Guthrie family in Charles' knighthood, and resented profoundly the blot which its hitherto stainless escutcheon had sustained by Garth's inexplicable action.

In the name of his proud war record, his honor as a gentleman, and his future participation in the councils and direction of Guthrie Steel, now almost a household word in the Dominion, Charles commanded his errant brother to return where love and duty called.

Holding this intimate communication, which the busy Charles had seen fit to share with his secretary, over the flame of the candle, Garth grimly watched it burn.

Clara, characteristically, had approached from a different angle. Although his letters, she wrote, had not mentioned his health, she was confident that he was still ill. He had tried that cold, cruel north. Why not give the country near home a chance, where his devoted family and a broken-hearted girl pined for him. If he could have seen how stanchly Ethel had taken the blow. She was showing a brave face to the gossips—was going everywhere, but hiding a wounded heart. They called her "The Widow," and, of course, people were mystified, but she and Clara were only counting the days when dear old Garth would return to them.

She finished with: "Ethel and I are like sisters, inseparable. And she's so proud of Charles' new honor. 'Think of it!' she said the other day, 'to be the sister-in-law of the great Sir Charles Guthrie!' So you see, Garth, she is still the same old Ethel, loving you—forgiving all."

"Yes," the man who read agreed, a corner of the mouth lifting, "she's the old Ethel." And he blew out the candle.

Earlier, at the Church of England mission, where Joan Quarrier and her brother were staying until Cameron could send them to Moose, he had said good-by, for at dawn he was to start for Elkwan. The manner of Reverend Swan, who opened the door to Garth's knock, was distinctly cool, but as he had avoided the missionary during his year at Albany, and developed a warm friendship with Pere Rousseau, the Oblate, the inhospitable reception was anticipated and ignored. The little man with the pale hair and eyes, fidgeted with embarrassment at the appearance of Garth.

"I am in doubt as to whether Miss Quarrier's brother would wish her to see you," said the clergyman, with as brave a show of dignity as his five-feet-four could command in the snubbing of the man whose eyes twinkled in frank amusement at the effort.

Then, in a voice which Garth knew would be clearly audible to the girl he wished to see, he said: "Miss Quarrier will decide without her brother's assistance whether she wishes to see me. Will you tell her I am here?"

Holding his position in the doorway, undecided as to his next move, the missionary reddened with anger at the trick. Then footsteps sounded behind him and the low voice of Joan Quarrier asked: "Is there someone to see me, Mr. Swan? Oh, it's Mr. Guthrie! Good evening." And she pushed past the disgruntled missionary to take Garth's extended hand.

"Do you mind talking outside? Mr. Swan fears that your brother doesn't approve of me," Guthrie flung at the figure in the door as he moved away with the girl, who sensed what had passed. "You see, your good brother has already poisoned the clerical mind," laughed Garth as they walked slowly to the clearing. "I'm leaving early tomorrow and came to say good-by."

The moon was up and Guthrie's sidelong glance caught the sobering of her face. She was looking straight ahead and the light which drew a shimmering trail over the quiet surface of the Albany brushed her heavy hair with silver.

"You're worried about your geese—it was fine of you to waste precious time bringing us here."

"I am still in your debt, Miss Quarrier," he said, and as he watched the profile of the girl walking beside him with its straight nose and firm chin, the realization that she was passing out of his life—this woman whom chance had thrown into the tragedy at Elkwan—came swift as a blow. The old sense of loss, felt so often in the days when a friend—a comrade—"went west," returned to him. The vivid color and tang of her personality—the splendid strength of her—were stirring him with an appeal hitherto unsensed. Now that the brief days of their comradeship were over, the memory of Joan Quarrier's instant comprehension of the nature of the pity, approaching affection, which Ninda inspired in him—of how the salve of her sympathy had eased the raw bitterness—poignantly returned.

And now this friendship—born of chance—was to be cut short off by the wall of a thousand miles of forest.

"I shall think of you often up there with Etienne, and Shot, and old Anne,"

"It Seems So Lonely and So—Unnecessary."

she hazarded. "It seems so lonely and so—unnecessary."

But Guthrie avoided reference to the cause of his exile. "We shall remember you—all of us. Without you, it would have been unthinkable."

"It was strange—that storm, and meeting as we did. Poor little Ninda!" she said, dreamily watching the silhouette of a belated canoe from the whitefish nets drift into the path of moonlight.

"It was an act of Providence. I wonder," he hesitated, then went on, "if you would care to send word of yourself to an exile, this winter?"

He saw her brows contract in thought. For a moment she seemed in doubt, then turned to him, tense in her earnestness. "You are not merely courteous—you really wish to hear from me?"

His face reflected his pleasure. "You will write then, to the exile?"

There was a sudden gleam of white teeth, a whimsical flash in her eyes, as she asked: "Wouldn't it be ungrateful to refuse so modest a request from one who has rescued the shipwrecked?"

"It would be most ungrateful and cruel," he laughed. "If you'll write, I'll have a little spruce waiting for the Christmas mail, and hang your letter on the tree, with candles."

"Unread?"

"Unread till Christmas morning. Then Shot and I will read it together—our Christmas, from you."

"And the other letters?" she queried, avoiding his quick glance.

"The others? Oh, they'll not be interesting—with their criticism and advice and news of my distinguished brother's doings."

"None of them?" Joan Quarrier's voice was strangely throaty as she gazed out over the shimmering river.

"None of them," was the quiet reply. He thrilled to the realization of the absolute sincerity of his answer.

Without meeting his eyes, she turned impulsively to the airedale who accompanied them. "Good-by, Shot! I'm going to miss you, boy!" And she took the head of the dog in her hand. As Shot's tail beat the air, his hairy throat rumbled. Then he bared his great fangs and made little snaps at the girl bending over him.

The girl looked up as she rubbed the dog's ears. "He's only saluting a brother—I mean a sister—in arms."

"One who served, as he did, with the wounded," added the man.

They were at the door of the mission.

"Good-by! The days will drag up there in the snow, waiting for the Christmas mail," said Guthrie, puzzled at his emotion—strangely reluctant to leave her—wondering at himself.

"Good-by, Mr. Exile!" She gave him her firm hand.

Hardly conscious of his purpose, he bent to search the dark eyes, frankly meeting his look. She smiled, he thought, wistfully as he said: "What you did for a comrade in distress—he will never forget. Good-by, Healer of Wounds."

Her eyes widened. Groping for his meaning, she watched him straighten, bring his hand to his forehead in a military salute, and turning, walk rapidly away. Until his tall figure was lost in the shadows, she stood, lips parted, wondering; then slowly opened the door and went in.

CHAPTER IV

Little did those whom Garth Guthrie had brought to Albany in his York boat sense what this act of friendliness to strangers might mean in days of drudgery—precious days lost from the goose hunt which was nearing its end—for the men from Elkwan. As the boat drifted down the south channel of the delta past the scrub-grown shores of Albany island, Guthrie's thoughts traversed the days since the storm and the meeting with the girl back at the Albany mission, who was going down the coast and out of his life, as the "wavies," from the Arctic, linger through the soft September weather, until the sting of the first norther sends them down the wind. But the "wavies" return. There would be no return to the west coast for Joan Quarrier.

He had left her, the night before, puzzled by the elation her promise to write him by the Christmas mail had aroused. And, always, as he strove to analyze the nature of his response to the appeal of her genuineness—her level-eyed meeting of life—the blond loveliness of Ethel, with her shrinking from the unpleasant—the inevitable—intruded with the knowledge of disillusion. Ethel was growing so vague—so shadowy—here in a land where raw life admitted of no subterfuge—no compromise. And yet, Ethel would wait for the brother of Sir Charles Guthrie, he told himself, with a tightening of the lips; of that he had no doubt.

The York boat reached the open water of the bay as the sun lifted, bringing an easterly breeze. As they worked up the channel to the post, a sense of loneliness chilled the heart of Guthrie. There would be no welcome, which, through the weeks of the summer, he had grown to cherish, on his homecoming—no joy in the wistful eyes of the girl who waited. All that remained to him now was the memory of a devotion—self-immolating, complete. Poor little Ninda!

Old Anne and the wife of Etienne stood on the shore while the voyagers made the boat fast to its buoy. As the men paddled in, it was evident that news awaited them.

"Somet'ing happen," said Etienne. "Marie ver' mooch excite' w'en she not stan' still."

"Bon jour, ladies!" called Guthrie, as he approached the chattering women on the beach. "What seems to be on your minds?"

"What men?"

"De man in de beeg boat—she was here. Dat one wid de bad face—McDonald Ha! Ha! de Injun call heem."

"What did he want?"

"He want talk wid you. He leave dis." Old Anne handed Guthrie a folded sheet of paper. Opening it, he read:

"The Hudson's Bay Company, Elkwan:

"This is to save you a trip to the island after the stuff left on the beach by that walrus-faced geologist, Quarrier. I can use most of it, and will pay St. John's prices for it on my return home. Have made an inventory.

"McDONALD."

"Well, he's a cool one!" commented Guthrie.

"Not if I know it! If he thinks he's going to get our share of the Akimiski hunt, he'll have to fight for it. He'll find he can't bluff us," replied Guthrie, with increasing irritation at the thought of the high-handed methods of the unknown. In the north a cache was inviolate, and the stores of Quarrier on the Akimiski beach had not been abandoned, but cached, to be recovered later. McDonald's appropriation of them under the circumstances was a distinct breach of northern custom. If this was a sample of what could be expected from him later, in the fight for the Akimiski fox trade, the winter and spring would hardly be dull on the west coast. As soon as they had shot their winter supply of geese, he would have a talk with Graham and Boucher, at Attawapiskat and Kapiskau.

"Too bad, Etienne, we were not here to meet Mr. Laughing McDonald. What did you think of him, Anne? He's a big man with red hair, isn't he?"

"Oh, ver' beeg, strong man, wid hair lak fire. Hees face!" Anne stopped to shudder. "He got de crazy face all tam, from hees hurt mout'."

"Poor devil!" thought Guthrie, "branded for life with that grin! Then he asked: "Who came ashore with him?"

The question was a signal for an emotional outburst from Marie. "Dey were bad men, M'sieu Guthree. One beeg one, wid de barbe noir, black beard, he try kees me, de femme of Etienne Savanne." The black eyes of the comely wife of Etienne flashed with anger at the memory.

"W'at! Dey try dat wid you, dees peopl'?" The sinewy fingers of the half-breed worked nervously as if groping for a knife handle. "W'at you do, Marie?" he demanded.

"McDonal' Ha! Ha! broke in Anne, "he talk ver' cross to de black beard—give heem push lak he was litt' boy. Dis McDonal', dey all scare of heem, dose men. Den dey paddle out to de boat."

"Good enough! McDonald seems to be boss all right," laughed Guthrie. "Black beard; that must be the Newfoundland whaler, Etienne, the captain of the schooner."

The face of Etienne hardened. "He mak mooch troubl' on dis coast—dis McDonal' Ha! Ha!—mooch troubl'."

"It looks like a lively winter for us, eh, Shot?" And the factor of Elkwan bent to rub the ears of his dog.

* * * * * * *

It was early October on the west coast, hunting weather, when the geese restlessly crossed and recrossed the wide flats between the timber and the sea, and the duck, in flocks of thousands, endlessly rose from the shallows to skirt for a space, the rim of the tide, only to settle again, and shortly repeat the flight. When they had shot two back-breaking loads, Etienne and Guthrie started for their camp out where a boulder-strewn sandspit thrusting seaward rendered the launching of a loaded canoe possible at the height of the tide. A mile from the tent on the sandspit, Etienne lifted his lowered head banded by the tump-line which held the flour bags filled with geese. Then he swung round to the bent figure following, eyes on the ground.

"Boat at de camp."

Guthrie straightened until his range of vision included the sandspit. Below the boulders at the nose of the spit lay a ship's boat. A boat could come only from the schooner of McDonald. What were they after?

Nearing the camp, the packers dropped their loads and continued with their guns. If these people had abused Shot, chained to his stake—Guthrie's pulse quickened at the thought. Near the tent three men idled, evidently waiting for the owners.

"You keep out of this, Etienne. You're sore. Let me do the talking," warned Guthrie, as he approached the camp. Suddenly breaking into a run, he shouted: "Stop baiting that dog, or I'll turn him loose on you!"

Standing out of reach, a young sailor tossed sand into the face of the infuriated airedale, straining at his leash.

"All right! Turn him loose," was the truculent reply, and retreating, the sailor cocked his shotgun.

"Put down that gun, you young fool;" commanded the elder of the three strangers to the boy, as Garth reached the camp.

"What are you people after—trouble?" demanded Guthrie, fighting for his self-control, for the badgering of his dog had left him hot.

The man addressed grinned good-naturedly and extended his hand. "Good day, Mr. Hudson's Bay; we ain't runnin' away from none. We saw your tent and rowed in to get some shells, if you have any—to sell."

Guthrie took the hand of the speaker, a heavily built man, with a beard. The anger left his face as he said: "Oh, you're not going to take the shells, then?" He was conscious, as he spoke, of the curiosity in the eyes of the man he faced, as they lingered on his scarred cheek.

"No," drawled the other. "You must think we're pirates. We pay as we go."

"But you robbed that cache on Akimiski—you left a note at Elkwan to that effect."

"McDonald will pay for that stuff—it would spoil in the rain."

"Well, we don't touch a man's cache in the north. By the way, where is this McDonald from?"

"We all hail from St. John's, Newfoundland."

"But McDonald?"

"Well, he hails from there, too," was the reply, but from the tail of his eye Guthrie caught a look in the face of the companion of the spokesman which belied the accuracy of the statement. "You say you'll sell us some shells?" continued the speaker.

"No, we can't give you any!" It was Guthrie's turn to smile. "We need every shell we've got." He glanced at the muzzles of the guns of the strangers. "Our shells wouldn't fit those cannon of yours, anyway. We use twelve gauge guns with No. 6 shot. At close range it gets more geese than this big stuff.

"So you've got Lewis guns, eh?" abruptly demanded Garth.

"Oh, yes! We're heeled, if you people should take the notion to try to run us out of the bay."

"Why, man! you've got as much right here as we have, but if you don't play straight, we'll run you out—that's all."

The blue eyes of the sailor met the chill gaze of the soldier in a long, unwavering stare, and from that mutual appraisal, the reaction in the mind of each man was identical.

"You may—but you'll sweat some. Now, I want to give you fair warning that some of your people have come to us this summer of their own accord. There's an Injun who claims you stole his daughter—"

"What! That skunk of an Ojibwa? He tells you that?" Guthrie sickened at the thought of Ninda's memory being made the catspaw of Indian gossip.

"That's what he claims. It's none of my business, but he's got it in for you, so don't blame us. He's working for us, of course, for the fur."

"A girl he claimed as his daughter came to Elkwan in June, dying with tuberculosis," said Garth quietly. "She couldn't travel—we took care of her till she died. He tried to hold me up—for stuff. I kicked him out, so he wants his revenge. Just tell him, Mr. —" "Skene," prompted the other. "Just tell him for me, Mr. Skene, that I'll give him to the dog if he shows up at the post. He knows Shot."

"Looks like a tough old veteran!" commented Skene, admiringly, glancing at the airedale, tense as a statue, hair and tail up, bristling at his stake.

"He is. He's an overseas man. He'd tear that Indian's throat out in one snap."

"There's another matter, too," continued Garth. "When your people came to Elkwan when we were down the coast, one of them—fellow with a black beard—tried something that will get him knifed if he shows up at the post again." At the words, Etienne slowly moved up to a position beside Guthrie, his right hand resting carelessly on his hip, the fingers touching the bone handle of his sheath knife. The bearded leader of the sailors glanced curiously at the flint-like face of the half-breed, and smiled indifferently at the threat. "Just tell him for me, will you, to keep away from Elkwan?"

"Oh, you mean Black Breault. He's sailing master—owns the schooner. I'm the mate. He's a bit rough, I'll admit, but don't make any mistake about who's boss. McDonald's running this party."

"That's why I'm asking you to tell McDonald that we won't stand for manhandling women on this coast," insisted Guthrie.

"I Kicked Him Out, So He Wants His Revenge."

"Right-o, I'll tell him. Well, we'll be off," said the big sailor, offering his hand, which Garth shook. "I'm glad to meet a reasonable Hudson's Bay man and one who wasn't sitting snug on the bay when we had our backs to the wall in front of Amiens."

And as Garth stood pondering the remark, Skene turned and joining his men, walked to his boat with a limp. He, too, thought the man who watched, is wearing his service stripe. The sailors launched their boat in the rising tide, and poling it out to the deeper water, rowed away.

So the memory of Ninda was to be mouthed on evil tongues? The story was going out among the Crees that the factor of Elkwan had taken her from her family. It was the kind of tale only too readily believed. Judging from the coolness of Swan, the missionary, Quarrier, without doubt, had published it in Albany; soon it would be the property of the whole west coast. Poor, loyal Ninda! Then, the thought of one who had seen and understood came like a breath of clean air from the spruce. He saw her again, her heavy hair touched by the moonlight, her fine, dark eyes with the questioning look, as she said: "Good-by, Mr. Exile!"

CHAPTER V

The winter wood cut, the geese salted and cached, the whitefish platform groaning with the spoil of the nets which would not be lifted until the ice, Guthrie and Etienne sat in council of war.

"How many of our people are wintering on the island?" asked Garth.

The half-breed closed his small eyes, his face contracted into a network of lines as he counted the families which had, through the summer, crossed the strait to hunt on the great island, instead of taking the river trail for the forest and muskeg of the Elkwan headwaters.

TWO BELMOND NEWSPAPERS TO BE CONSOLIDATED NEXT WEEK

Independent Takes Over Herald-Press

Subscription List Of Two Will Be Combined; Consolidated Papers Sent To All

CHANGE OCCURS JULY 1ST

Thru a deal consumated Monday of this week, The Belmond Independent acquires the business and good will of the Herald-Press, and the two papers, beginning next week, will be consolidated.

This consolidation of Belmond's two newspapers is in keeping with the trend of the times. During the past ten years, over three thousand newspapers in the United States have either consolidated or suspended publication. Increased costs of publication, and the demand on the part of the public, both readers and advertisers, for better service have made such consolidations necessary. This fact is shown in the consolidations known to local people, such as the Times with the Eagle at Eagle Grove, the Sentinel with the Citizen at Iowa Falls, and the Des Moines, Dubuque and Cedar Rapids dailies among others. Thru such consolidations the reading and advertising public is given a better coverage of the field, with a consequent better representation and service.

The Independent will take over the subscription lis. of the Herald-Press, and combine the two. Subscribers paid in advance to the Herald-Press will be given credit on their subscriptions to the consolidated papers. Where there is a duplication, a subscriber being paid in advance to both papers, the unexpired term on the Herald-Press will be added to the term paid on The Independent. In other words, if you are now taking the Herald-Press and not The Independent, you will receive the consolidated papers for the length of time you are paid to the one. If you are taking both, and are paid ahead say six months on both, you will receive a year's credit on the combined papers. The subscription policy of The Independent, cash in advance, will be continued. Subscribers of the Herald-Press who are not paid, will receive the consolidated papers for one month, when, unless renewed, they will be removed from the list. No change will be made in the subscription price.

The equipment of the Herald-Press will be sold, to a large extent, part of it being retained by The Independent.

The publisher of The Independent earnestly requests the friendly cooperation of the readers and advertisers in making the consolidated paper a better Belmond newspaper than either of the two papers have been heretofore. It will be our aim to be absolutely just and fair to all, to give Belmond people a fair representation in every way, and to give better service to both readers and advertisers. Belmond can have a better newspaper than it has ever had before, and with your co-operation it will have. The consolidation of the two papers takes effect tomorrow, July 1. After that date, we will appreciate your calling phone number 115 if you have news items, advertising or printing.

Miss Sophie Johnson, who has been linotype operator for the Herald-Press, will be retained as operator for The Independent.

SHEFFIELD MAN KILLED

Henry Storck, forty-five years old, manager of the Sheffield Farmers Shipping Association, was instantly killed recently when the Ford truck he was driving was struck by a fast M. & St. L. freight train. Storck's head was severed from the body. The truck was reduced to kindling, and seventeen hogs, comprising the load in the truck, were all either killed or injured.

M. C. KENEFICK DIES

M. C. Kenefick died at the farm home south of Belmond, Monday of this week, following a protracted illness. Mr. Kenefick had been steadily failing in health for the past year or so, and lately his condition became so much worse that the end was anticipated.

"Mike" Kenefick was among the early settlers of Belmond, and every old settler of this community for many miles around will mark his passing with genuine regret. For many years he conducted the meat market now operated by Mr. Petersen, and his friendly disposition, ready wit and business tactics won him a host of friends and customers. For the past few years he has resided with his wife and two sons on the farm, having retired from active business life.

Funeral services were held Wednesday morning from St. Francis church.

WHERE YOU CELEBRATING?

As Belmond is not celebrating the Fourth of July this year, local people who seek the red lemonade, hot dogs and crowds will have their choice of several nearby celebrations. Hampton has a full day scheduled, with an address by Henry Wallace, of Des Moines, as a daylight feature, and a big fireworks display at night. Algona, on the west, has a full program arranged, including a spectacular fireworks display. Britt will furnish you a variety of events, and Clear Lake, as usual, will have a large crowd. At Eagle Grove, the county Farm Bureau is celebrating with a big picnic and list of sports. Cornelia comes in with a ball game and the rest of the attractions there. If you prefer peace and solitude with a jug of lemonade beneath the shade of a tree, Morse Lake offers unusually attractive possibilities. Mayhap, with luck, you can catch a bull head, and the water's warm.

DOWS MAN HAS UNIQUE DISPLAY OF CABINET WORK

The display in the window of the Owl grocery at Iowa Falls has attracted many people during the past week, says the Sentinel. David Miller of Dows, a carpenter and cabinet maker, has on exhibit some of his work which is very unique, and which would require a great deal of skill and patience. In addition to the church building and farm house with its surroundings, there has been placed in the window during the past week a small checker board, the construction of which requires 22206 pieces of wood. The map of Iowa, which is a very interesting study, contains 1200 pieces. In the southeastern part of the state, in Lee county, is a cradle which marks the birthplace of the first white child born in the state, the log cabin above is where the first school was taught and the figure of the apple in the same county shows where the first orchard was planted. The various state institutions are marked with buildings of wood in contrasting color, and many more interesting points are brought out in the study. Mr. Miller, who made these remarkable pieces, is 78 years of age.

CATHOLIC CHURCH SCHOOL

Two Sisters of Mercy from Cedar Rapids are conducting a school for religious instruction at St. Francis Catholic church and chapel in Belmond the school beginning Monday of this week. Some 75 children from the parishes at Belmond and Goodell began the study Monday, two classes being held each morning from 9:00 to 12:00 o'clock.

The Community club enjoyed a splendid talk last Friday, by Miss Nina Courson, of Clarion. Miss Courson, who recently returned from a trip to Europe, gave a fascinating description of Paris, its people and beauties. A large audience was present to hear her talk, which was greatly enjoyed.

SIX ESCAPE DEATH AT DOWS

Six young people driving a sedan plunged over the railing to a bridge approach at the southeast edge of Dows, Saturday night, going about 20 feet into the water of the river. The car landed upside down on top of them, yet none of the six were more than slightly injured.

In the party were three young men from Ackley, and a young man from Iowa Falls, together with two young ladies from Dows. All of the occupants of the car received bruises and cuts, but none were of a serious nature.

The young people were coming home from a dance near Iowa Falls, and in turning a curve approaching the bridge, the brakes failed to hold and the car crashed thru the iron railing of the guard rail, breaking the railing from the cement foundation. Beyond a general soaking, the car was not much damaged.

Almost 700,000 automobiles were registered in Iowa in 1926 and their owners paid $10,208,416 in registration fees, according to a report just issued by the United States department of agriculture.

Silver Wedding Is Celebrated

Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Martin Are Guests Of Many Friends

Last week Thursday was the Silver Wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Martin. Their son Albert had managed to get them to go on a trip to West Bend, returning about 5:30 o'clock in the afternoon, to find about 90 friends and relatives gathered on their specious lawn to help them celebrate.

The bride and groom were seized, placed in a cart, and taken for a ride. They were then taken into the house to be prepared for the ceremony. A veil of coarse netting and a wreath was placed upon the bride. They were then placed under a bell (cowbell) where Rev. Leinbach performed the ceremony.

The whole procedure was in a humorous strain. After the ceremony, and congratulations, all sat down to a sumptous picnic supper on long tables placed on the lawn. The bride and groom were placed in a boat, we suppose to sail on the tempestous sea of matrimony. Soon a band of pirates appeared and abducted the bride, taking her into a nearby corn field, and the groom with the bravest of his friends went to her rescue.

A purse of silver from their friends was presented to Mr. and Mrs. Martin, and from their relatives they received a very heavy chest of silver which upon opening proved to be filled with junk iron and silver coins scattered thru it. Mr. Martin said he always knew there was money in old iron!

The latter part of the evening was spent in stunts and fun, the entire evening being one of jolly festivity. Mr. and Mrs. Martin have a large circle of friends and the good wishes and congratulations they showered upon them on this occasion shows the high esteem in which they are held in this community.

Among the out of town guests were Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Pritchard and family of Garner; Mr. and Mrs. C. Barnes and family of Garner; Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Pritchard and daughter, Star, of Buffalo Center; Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Ramsay of Des Moines; and Mr. and Mrs. A. P. McGregor of Des Moines.

SELLS HALF OF CARLOAD OF CREAM SEPARATORS

Cato C. Griesy announces the sale of over half of the cream separators he recently received, a carload. One hundred machines comprise a carload, and to date between fifty and sixty of them have been placed on farms in the vicinity of Belmond.

LUNCHEON CLUB TODAY

The Luncheon club meets this noon in regular session. The program for the meeting will be a review of the questionaires recently sent to the business district, and some interesting points are promised for discussion.

Harold Johnson, Marshal Norris and Edwin Christie, who are attending college in Milwaukee, are home for a vacation.

MAY ORGANIZE BALL TEAM IN BELMOND

Efforts are being made by some of the fans to organize a baseball team in Belmond, using all home players so far as it is possible. Younger players are being favored, with the idea that with the experience and playing they receive this season, next year the town should have a good foundation for a winning team. It is understood that several games have been scheduled, the first of which will be played early in July. Belmond has the material for a good home team, and should be able to develop a winning combination by next season.

BUTTERMAKERS PICNIC HERE

Buttermakers, their wives and families from District No. 10, held a highly enjoyable picnic in the City park in Belmond, Sunday. Some 125 were present from the counties comprising district No. 10, namely Wright, Franklin, Story, Marshal, Harrison and Hardin. A bountiful picnic dinner was served cafeteria style, and free ice cream and pop filled in the vacant spots. Five inspectors were here, Chief Inspector B. O. Brownley, of Des Moines, being among those present. Belmond's buttermaker, Clyde Jennings, had the affair in charge. These picnics are held once each month, in the various counties, this being Mr. Jenning's turn to act as host, and his capacity as host was evidenced in the highly enjoyable time spent.

WORK STARTED ON 15

Contractor Fox has begun work on the grading of Primary No. 15, south of Belmond. His crew started last week at the junction of 15 and 10, eight miles south, taking the first three-mile stretch of 15 for the initial section. Traffic is being detoured one mile west on No. 10, then three miles north on a side road and back one mile east to strike 15 again below the John Campbell farm. When taking this detour, motorists should pay very careful attention to a railroad crossing. It is a wicked crossing, being absolutely blind until you are right on the tracks. Red flags and warning signs have been placed on each side, with a red light at night, and the railroad company has installed an alarm bell. But regardless of all these, "Stop, Look, Listen" is the only thing to do at this crossing, which is the most deadly we have ever seen. This cannot be stressed too heavily.

At the junction of 15 and 10, the widest curve in this part of the state is being made. Land was purchased from the farms on both sides of the road there, and the highway will have almost a quarter circle at this point.

LIFE SAVING DEMONSTRATION TO BE GIVEN HERE JULY 6-7

Wednesday and Thursday of next week, July 6 and 7, there will be a representative of the National Organization of the Red Cross here to demonstrate and give instruction in First Aid and Life Saving.

This man belongs to the Life Saving Corps and is familiar with every branch of this work. He has been secured by the local chapter of the Red Cross to put on this work for the benefit of this community.

Methods of first aid and life saving is something everyone should know and you are urged to take an active part in this program.

Since he is to be here two days, it is best to have two divisions.

Wednesday, July 6, Junior Division, 2:30 p. m. to 7 p. m.

Thursday, July 7, Senior Division, 2:30 p. m. to 7 p. m.

Demonstrations and instructions to be at Wilson's Point at Lake Cornelia. The following are a few of the things to be demonstrated:

The best methods and styles in swimming.

Two Ex-Bankers of Eagle Grove Indicted

Three Indictments Returned Against Ex-President And Cashier By Grand Jury

FISH LICENSES ARE OUT

Three indictments each were returned against E. C. Platt and Harry Wright, president and cashier respectively of the defunct Citizens State Bank of Eagle Grove, when the grand jury reported to Judge Clock, Monday afternoon.

The indictments charge the officers with receiving and accepting deposits when the bank was insolvent and with knowingly subscribing and making false reports to the superintendent of banking of the state of Iowa on July 7, 1924, and September 16, 1925.

Bonds for each of the accused were set at $2500 on each indictment, making a total of $7500 for each man. Both Mr. Platt and Mr. Wright were in Eagle Grove the day the grand jury reported and both immediately came to Clarion and posted bonds. Mr. Platt is now residing at Bloomington, Ill., while Mr. Wright is making his home at Flint, Mich.

The last day that the Citizens State bank was open for business was December 1, 1925; the following morning a notice was found on the door that it had been taken over by the state banking department. This is the bank in which E. J. Thompson effected defalcations which caused the closing of the bank, and for which he is now serving a term in the state penitentiary.

Judge Clock will return to Clarion July 12 for a short session of court.

Action is brought on behalf of the Citizens State Bank of Eagle Grove for judgment against D. L. and B. Y. Miller for $569.14 that has been due since December 8, 1925.

Judgment was given to Citizens State Bank of Goldfield against F. M. Bosworth for $3403.55.

A stipulation in the case involving custody of Alfred and Geraldine Parkinson, minors, was reached to the effect that during the school year they shall be with their grandmother, Mrs. Alice McBurney, at Dows, and shall be allowed to attend school. During the remainder of the year their mother, Mrs. Guy Moore, shall have the right of possession and control of the children. Judge Clock stipulated that while the children are in the possession of either, they shall teach the children insofar as possible, to love and respect the other.

Fish licenses expire June 30 and inorder to do any fishing on the Fourth it will be necessary to secure a new license. The fish and game department had made a new ruling. Beginning with the present issue of new licenses, which will expire on April 1, 1928, each succeeding license will expire annually thereafter. This change is made so that the one license covers both the fishing and fall hunting season.—Monitor.

The publicity that has been given the flights of Lindbergh and Chamberlin have resulted in creating a large interest in aviation, or rather a revival of interest in the flying game, with the consequent crashing of planes piloted by more or less inexperienced aviators. The daily papers are carrying increasing numbers of reports of serious or fatal injuries to aviators and passengers of privately owned planes. Fired with the ambition to fly, and thrilled by the exploits of Lindbergh and Chamberlin, too many young men are venturing into the air without the necessary training to operate a ship. Flying nowadays, when done by an experienced pilot, is as safe as riding in an automobile; in fact, the proportion of accidents from straight flying is less than that with automobiles. The accidents usually occur from stunt flying, and from the lack of experience on the part of beginners in the game. The experienced pilot who flies straight seldom has an accident now. In the army, accidents are greater than in private or commercial flying, owing principally to army aviators being required to perform various stunts as part of their training. A fine example of what the experienced aviator will do in straight flying is shown in the record of Shirley Short, of Goldfield, who was recently awarded high honors for his service in government mail carrying. Ths increased interest in flying is a good thing for the industry, and will result in vast improvement beyond question. But our advice is: Before you go up, make certain the aviator knows his business and is an experienced flyer.

TRAINING CAMPS

Reinbeck Courier: "Now and then we run across some lugubrious lunkhead who sheds bitter tears at the idea that Uncle Sam should establish training camps for the purpose of fitting our boys for cannon fodder. There isn't a bit of use trying to get the real idea into the head of such. Uncle Sam isn't trying to make soldiers out of our boys. He is trying to make stronger, better men; disciplined, self-respecting, patriotic men out of them. He's a wise old bird, is Uncle Sam; and he knows that if his Training Camps will perform that work, he won't haveto worry if ever the time should come again—which God forbid—when he needs good soldiers and capable officers, he will have them ready to hand. In the meantime he has trained them to better life and better service in peace.

We might as well admit at the start that we qualify as one of the aforesaid "lunkheads" whether lugubrious or not. If the real idea of these training camps is to make better men and not better soldiers, then that idea is far from entering our head and until the system of such camps is noticeably changed it will probably be difficult to get it past the bone that covers what we fondly imagine is a brain.

"Uncle Sam isn't trying to make soldiers out of our boys; he is trying to make stronger, better men." If that is true why the military atmosphere and trappings that completely surround these camps? Why the military discipline and regulations? Why are regular army officers used in charge of these camps? Why is the War Department the one so deeply interested in the camps and why is it that the strong and active lads are the ones in greatest demand in these camps and not the sickly, weak and puny ones? If you are trying to make civilians why give only military training? Why aim one direction to hit another?

No one can object to such physical training and exercises as will tend to make a stronger and better race of people. To this end as much effort should be directed to girls camps as to those for boys, since the girls of today are the future mothers of the race. But the training camps are not designed for physical training alone; they are designed as training for warfare and it is not this that makes the gravest objection to them. The worst thing about these camps is the way they glorify war and instill in youthful minds a militaristic attitude. It's no use trying to convince us differently until we can see army and navy men striving earnestly for peace and not always and forever augmenting the preparation for war and stressing the absolute necessity for larger appropriations and increased personel in their particular arm of the service.

The path toward peace starts with thinking peace and peaceful methods.

READ ENTIRE NEW TESTAMENT

During the meetings conducted at Denison under the auspices of Dr. Newlin, the entire New Testament was read in seventeen hours. The reading began at 3:00 in the morning and was finished at about 8:00 that night. The Testament was divided into fifteen minute sections, and each reader was on the platform, ready to read when the one before was through, so that hardly a minute was lost. Dr. Newlin had previously conducted about firty of these readings. Experience has shown that it is best to begin with the first chapter of Acts, continuing through to Revelations, and then to return to the first chapter of Matthew, ending with the last chapter of John's gospel.

During the National Conference of Social Work in Des Moines, on the only Sunday night that intervened, more than 5,000 Protestants, Catholics and Jews packed the great Shrine temple to listen to an address by Rabbi A. H. Silver of the Jewish Temple, Cleveland, Ohio. Invocation was by a Protestant minister, introduction was by a Catholic and the address was by a Jew, and the great audience composed of various religious creeds vigorously applauded the utterance of the Rabbi. Everybody joined in singing "America, the Beautiful." It is estimated that 1,000 persons were unable to get inside of the temple. The following Monday 600 co-eds from the Universities and colleges of Iowa stood and applauded Madam Wagner, head of welfare service in Berlin, Germany, who was a guests at an banquet given in honor of Miss Janes Addams, of Hull House, Chicago. Mrs. Wagner in broken English paid a glowing tribute to America. Every state in the union and ten foreign countries were represented at the great conference. More than 3,000 delegates were registered. The outstanding men and women engaged in public welfare activities in the United States were present.

An excellent interest was shown in last Sunday's services, but we should look forward to better things for next Lord's Day. About our Sunday School. We have a good Sunday School, but can certainly make it a better one. Now, are you doing something to insure that our talked of picnic will become a reality in the near future? You know what the plan is as to when the picnic is to be something more than looked forward to. A better attendance and better all around Sunday School next Lord's Day.

TEACHING A CHILD TO TELL THE TRUTH

Children are likely to tell untruths from innocent motives. They have active imaginations and are not always able to discriminate between the illusions of their dreams, things they wont to believe and hope, and the actual hard facts. They will gradually outgrow these imaginative visions and come to see the bald truth as they grow older. They should be encouraged to draw the line between "make believes" and the real truth and not think that they can palm off on society a line of fictions, as real truth.

Wordsworth says the child comes "trailing clouds of glory" but he loses these delightful halucinations as he journeys "inland." Rather a pity, too, isn't it?

By a severe attitude, a harsh tone, or display of sorrow over the acts of a child, a mother can so scare the child that she will make him afraid to tell her the truth lest she punish or scold him or grieve over his deed. To shield himself or her, he will make up another story or hide the truth from her.

Probably George Washington's father did not go at him rough shod and ask him severely who chopped down the cherry tree, nor threaten to punish him if he did it, nor act as though he would be terribly ashamed and humiliated or grieved half sick if his little boy did that. He probably approached young George in a kindly manner and made it easy for him to tell the truth. Then, when he had confessed, his father praised his honesty and told im he would rather have a truthful son tham a cherry tree. That made the lad resolve that he would always tell the truth, and that set him a notch higher in integrity. Had the father taken it too seriously, the boy would have determined not to let his father know it next time.

This thought, together with a memory of one's own mistakes might make parents more merciful with childish misdeeds.

If there is any time we are likely to get started off "on the wrong foot," it is when getting out of bed. Many a person, after a restless night, due to worries or too much supper, gets up feeling cross. For this reason, a cheery breakfast is the thing. We can make this morning meal o good time to "change step," transferring the weight to the other foot.

Everything about breakfast should suggest happiness: Brilliant lighting, sunshine if possible, gay curtains, a gayly colored breakfast room, bright dishes, flowers and candlesticks. The breakfast itself should start off with a colorful orange or grape-fruit, the toast be crisp and brown, and the coffe fragrant and golden brown. Pleasant conversation should add its quota to family cheer this first meal of the day. If the family can't go along in good mood after such a propitious send-off, then they must be real grouches and a spanking is the other treatment indicated by their symptoms.

TO REMOVE HAIRS

Even the least prudish person may sometimes pause and wonder just how far the modern feminine mode will take us. Perfect ladies of today wear just about one-sixth as many garments as their mothers wore, and those garments are so much shorter, narrower, thinner and simpler that they would not have been considered clothes at all a generation ago.

Skirts have receded upward until they reveal the knee. Sleeves have vanished completely from even afternoon dresses. The guimpe, with which grandmother modestly covered her neck and bosom, is as obsolete as an oldfashioned phaeton. Meanwhile, thinner and more transparent fabrics have taken the place of the still gros-grained silks, bombozines, challis, poplins and heavy satins that grandmother wore.

Women today are frankly showing their necks, their backs (inevening clothes) their arms, their legs, and, in bathing clothes, their thighs as well and the doctors tell us that throwing off their heavy coverings, myriad petticoats, tight-laced corsets, heavy bustles, stiff, high collars, and dragging skirts has vastly improved the health of woman-kind.

But frank revealment is not attractive unless a woman is both shapely and smooth-skinned. Her skin may be fair as a lily or richly, handsomely brunette; but smooth it must be, to be attractive, and hair must not adorn it. Hairy arms and legs bespeak virility, not feminine daintiness ond charm.

What the average woman needs is an inexpensive preparation which she can safely and easily use at home, without fear of injuring her skin or suffering any pain. The cream depilatory, as easy to use as cold cream, admirably meets this need and solves a perplexing problem, so that any woman can now wear sheer hose without embarrassment, sleeveless frocks without shame. Once only theatrical beauties had these beauty aids, today any woman can afford them.

Charles XII

A ROUGH LOOKING boy of fifteen came to the throne of Sweden in 1697, under the title of Charles XII, and started in at once on a cross between the simple and the strenuous life. He gave no sign that he was going to make a name for himself, for he hated the stupid business of state and spent most of his time in hunting and athletics. Nor was there anything very kingly in his looks. His habitual dress was an old blue coat with copper buttons, buffalo skin gloves and huge boots that came above the knees.

In those days of hard drinking and high living his way of life made him a marked man. He drank no wine, ate only coarse bread, and slept on the bare ground covered by a cloak.

Patkul, the wily Lithuanian diplomat, thought the boy king a fool and hit on a plan whereby other countries might take advantage of Charles' carelessness of state affairs. He formed a triple alliance—Russia, Poland and Denmark—against Sweden. Denmark opened operations by invading Swedish territory. Then, for the first time, the world realized what character of king this unkempt, sport-loving boy was destined to be.

For Charles, with a fierceness and vigor no one had dreamed he possessed, drove out the Danes and turned on the two other members of the alliance. He put away forever the pleasant outdoor home life he loved and turned to the wilder sport of hunting men. Russia, following Denmark's lead, had advanced on Narva and the country around the Gulf of Finland. Poland's army had besieged Riga.

Charles, with barely 20,000 men, marched against the 80,000 Russians encamped under the walls of Narva. Then followed one of the strangest and briefest battles in the annals of warfare. Charles, disdaining all known military tactics, "rushed" the enemy's camp, charging headlong into a force four times the size of his own. In less than fifteen minutes he had stormed it. Of the 80,000 soldiers, 30,000 were killed and the rest captured or scattered. Without pausing, Charles hurried his little army across the Dwina, attacked the Saxon army intrenched there and utterly routed it. Then he turned his attention to the Poles. By 1708 all Poland was helpless before the twenty-one-year-old Swedish youth, and three years later he dictated peace terms to his three enemies.

He had these once-powerful foes wholly at his mercy, yet he treated them magnanimously.

Having completely broken up the alliance against Sweden and saved his country, Charles might have been expected to go back with a clear conscience to his old, easy-going mode of life. But his fighting blood was up. The lust of conquest had fired his brain and his former pleasures no longer appealed to him. He planned to crush Russia, and in 1707, with an army 37,000 strong, he marched on Moscow. But instead of going thither direct and striking one decisive blow, as was his custom, he listened to the advice of his ally, the Cossack chief Mazeppa, that he march first through the Ukraine in the hope of inciting the Cossacks to join him. The Ukraine expedition was a failure. In 1709 Charles attacked the rich city of Pultowa and was about to capture it when Czar Peter I of Russia bore down upon him with 70,000 men.

Charles turned eagerly to meet this new foe. But in a preliminary skirmish he received a dangerous wound in the thigh. So, in the battle itself (July 8, 1709), he had to issue his commands from a litter. His troops, deprived of his inspiring presence, and weakened by starvation and fatigue, fell back before the superior Russian force.

His hopes baffled and his army beaten, Charles seemed to have lost all he had hitherto gained. But he wasted no time in despair. To check the Russia invasion, he promptly incited Turkey to war with Russia. The latter country's diplomats, however, persuaded the Turks that Charles had designs against Turkey, and an armed body of men was sent to arrest him.

Charles was still at Varnitza, in Turkish territory, and had a guard of less than 300 Swedes. Yet with this puny force he defied all Turkey. He defended his house against a whole army of Turks and fought off the besiegers until they burned the house over his head. He was captured, fighting, but escaped in disguise and made his way to the fortress of Stralsund. There a mighty army of Russians, Danes, Saxons and Prussians assailed him on December 23, 1715, and by sheer weight of numbers defeated him.

No longer able to win by force he now, for the first time, turned to statecraft. He formed a stupendous plan to win what might in time have amounted to a world empire. His idea, in brief, was to form an alliance with Russia, attack and conquer Norway, from Norway to cross to Scotland, invade Great Britain and dethrone King George I. The scheme almost succeeded. The alliance was made with Russia, Norway was invaded and partly conquered. But, on November 30, 1718, while besieging Fredrikshall, Charles' head was crushed by a cannon ball.

Charles XII was but thirty-six when he died, and with his death Sweden sank from the high power to which his genius and mad courage had raised her.

FREE AIR

Did you hear about the terrible robbery that happened to one of our young business men last week? Certainly was terrible. He came home to his wife in the wee sma' hours o' the mornin', and proceeded to disrobe.

"Why," said his wife, "you haven't got your underwear on. You were wearing it when you left this morning. I'm perfectly sure."

Her spouse glanced down for a moment, puzzled. Then, like a flash, came the inspiration:

"Good heavens! I've been robbed!"

* * * *

Been wondering whether that fish yarn they say Fred Shipley is telling wasn't somewhat along the same order. As we understand it, Fred claims he caught a whale, or a fish closely akin to one, and got the whale in or up to the boat, or something, and it got away.

* * * *

This fish tale was told us by a minister, so we are taking it for granted.

* * * *

Sounds like Fred, anyway, and Dite Packard might have had a hand in framing the story.

* * * *

Say, that reminds us: Get Dite to tell you about that time a traveling man asked him if he knew a certain young lady by the name of Annie.

* * * *

Comes now Ward Martin with a clipping about Dr. Sid Martin, of Carroll, who according to this yarn, hooked a 40-pound muskie near Hackensack, Minn., this spring.

* * * *

We aren't doubting the story, you understand, but you know our rule: As the proof of the pudding is in the eating, so is the proof of the story in the fish.

* * * *

We'll wager two bits Fred feeds us fish for dinner, today.

* * * *

And inasmuch as we have to furnish the program, we'll probably be the biggest fish at the table.

* * * *

Understand there was some complaint about our suggestion regarding the sugar factory last week. Not in regard to the idea but in the way we kept 'em in suspense so long before the blow fell. Never would do to blurt it right out, the shock might have been disastrous. And so far as we know, not a single move has been made to put the idea into effect.

* * * *

Wonder how Geo. Goelz's potatoes are coming?

* * * *

Next Monday being the grand and glor-eee-usss Fourth,we hope you have a good time, don't hold any firecrackers too long, and don't get too—uh, er—hot. You know.

SMILES

Two men bumped into each other. "Clumsy idiot!" exclaimed the first. The second quick-wittedly offered his hand and said, "Glad to know you, mine's Brown."

"What did your father die of?"

The Unusual Distinction

"I admire determination in a man, don't you?"

"That depends. If it brings success, I praise it as splendid perseverance; if failure, Idenounce it as confounded obstinacy."

Barkers

"You like dogs?"

"Yes," answered Miss Cayenne. "They are conversationally restful. When they bark, you know they are not trying to sell you something."

Selfish Husband

Mrs. Newlywed—What's this thing here?

Her husband—It's a pawn ticket.

"Why didn't you get two, so we could both go?"

The Brute

She: What do you mean by hurting father?

He: Hurting your father! Why I never—

She: You did. His bunion has just been kiling him ever since he kicked you down stairs last night.

The First Stage

"Sandy," he said, "I wonder if you could oblige me wi' a cigaret?"

"But I thocht you said you'd stoppit smokin'?" said Sandy reluctantly.

AGRICULTURAL NEWS NOTES

FARMERS LEAD IN EATING COST

When the food furnished by the farm is counted in, it actually costs the average person on the farm 50 percent more to eat than it does the average member of a wage earner's family in the city. At least this was true in a study conducted not long ago by workers from Iowa State College.

The average cost of food for 125 Iowa farm families was equal to the average for 102 Des Moines wage earners, altho the farm families averaged 3.5 members while the Des Moines families averaged 4.9 persons each. Hence, the average per capita cost of food was 50 percent greater on the farms than in Des Moines.

The same studies showed that farm families also spent more per capita for clothes than the Des Moines wage earners, but decidedly less for furnishings and equipment. The cause of this difference in living costs was attributed to a higher percentage of money invested in telephones, central heating systems, bathrooms, indoor toilets, kitchen sinks and drains, sewer systems, power washing machines, self heating irons, pianos, furniture and advancement purposes in the high sections.

Thes ame study showed that there is a proportional increase in living costs as the education of the parents increased.

The work was carried still further in an effort to determine whether well educated parents gave their children more opportunity for advanced education than did less well educated people. In general, it was found that the more education received by parents the more extensive the education given the children.

BRAN MASH GOOD CONDITIONER

A general rule for feeding work horses, suggested by A. B. Caine, of the Animal Husbandry Department, Iowa State College, is as follows:

Horses on light work should receive 1 to 1 1-4 pounds of hay and 1-2 to 3-4 pound of grain per 100 pounds live weight. Horses on medium work should receive about the same allowance of hay and about a quarter of a pound more grain per hundred pounds of live weight. Horses on heavy work should receive about one-fourth pound less hay and 1 to 1 1-2 pounds of grain per hundred pounds of live weight, idle horses should receive all of the roughage they will clean up and a small allowance of grain if they are slightly thin.

Mr. Caine advocates feeding three-eights of the grain and one-fourth of the hay at each the morning and noon feed, with the remainder of the feed at night. He also advocates feeding a bran mash, made by mixing 2 quarts of bran with 2 quarts of boiling water, allowing to steam and then mixing into a thick gruel with cold water. This should be fed once weekly, preferably Saturday night, he says.

FARM INCOME IS ON UP GRADE

The gross income of Iowa farmers has increased annually since the low point of the depression in 1921, according to a study recently completed by the agricultural economists at Iowa State College. This study included 10 of the state's leading agricultural products, which were the ones upon which most reliable data were available.

Upon an index basis and considering the 1920 prices as 100, the index of gross income for the following years was 62 for 1921, 68 for 1922, 78 for 1923, 80 for 1924, 84 for 1925 and 92 for 1926. In dollars, the gross total income by years since 1921 for the 10 products was: 1920, $782,040,000; 1921, 487,449,000; 1922, $533,907,000; 1923, $609,118,000; 1924, $622,356,000; 1925, $659,848,000; and 1926 $719,145,000.

Hogs, this study shows, have been the chief source of income to Iowa farmers in the past seven years. In 1926, they contributed nearly a half of the income from the 10 products, of $305,750,000.

The gross returns from the sale of corn have fluctuated widely. Corn brought $137,386,000 in 1920, $70,170,000 in 1921, $73,024,000 in 1922, $86,361,000 in 1923, dropped back to $73,893,000 in 1924 and still further to $50,947,000 in 1925. In 1926, corn increased again to $70,449,000.

The returns from oats, wheat and barley have also varied considerably from year to year, but dairy products and beef cattle have shown fairly consistent increases. The returns from eggs and poultry products have varied more than dairy products.

While the gross income of Iowa farmers has apparently improved rather steadily since 1921, the Iowa State economists point out that farm prices have not yet overtaken the prices of the things the farmer must buy and that in 1926, farm products would exchange for only 87 percent as much of non-agricultural products as they would in the pre-war period of 1910 to 1915.

That a small crop may bring farmers more total income than a large one was shown in the study. In 1926, for example, 3 million fewer hogs than in 1924 brought $72,000,000 more income, due to a higher price in 1926 and because the 1926 hogs averaged heavier in weight. A 27 percent larger crop of corn marketed in 1926 than in 1924 brought 5 percent less gross income, due to a higher price in 1924.

Those who are interested in the study of Iowa farm income for 1920 to 1926 may secure complete information by writing to the Bulletin Section, Ames for Circular 104, "Income to Iowa Agriculture, 1920 to 1926," which is now being printed and will be ready for distribution in a few days.

IOWA STATE FAIR HAS BIG PROGRAM

The headline educational features which the state of Iowa will assemble this summer as the chief attractions at her seventy-third annual Iowa State Fair and Exposition August 24 to September 2, has been announced by the fair management.

They will include:

A national livestock show embracing more than 6,000 head of purebred horses, cattle, swine and sheep from the best known breeding farms throughout the country.

Agricultural exhibits covering many acres and comprising showings of prize grains, fruits and garden produce from all parts of the state.

A series of thirty-one county-wide farm bureau projects exhibits showing work being done in all fields of farming.

A junior state fair, embracing contests, demonstrations, livestock and farm produce entries by more than 1,000 boys and girls from the farms of Iowa.

Over 90,000 square feet of exhibits by Iowa universities, colleges and public schools in the new $265,000 Educational Building.

Displays of all the fish and game native to Iowa in the state's new Fish and Game building.

A mid-season motor show, including more than 100 different automobiles, truck and tractors in the new 1928 models.

Fair officials estimated today that more than 500 carloads of exhibits and displays would be brought in to the state's big exposition here this year.

40 ACRES OF TOMATOES

Lake Mills Graphic: The Lake Mills Canning Company are making a large venture into the tomato packing end of the industry this year, having leased forty acres of land west of the Charlie Colby place. These eighty acres are being treated with Armour's commercial fertilizer which contains all the ingredients needed for plant life.

An order for 120,000 tomato plants was placed this spring and divided among the three neighboring greenhouses, Albert Lea, Forest City and Mason City, as the order was too large for any one of them to supply. It requires 3,000 plants to the acre and eight men are now engaged in planting.

A rotary hoe, horse-driven, has been secured with which to cultivate the plants and twenty Mexicans from the sugar beet fields near Bricelyn, Minn. have been engaged to come this fall and harvest the ripe fruit.

The variety of tomatoes planted is known as the Redhead strain, because of their early ripening qualities. A large plot of ground has also been set aside into which six different varieties of tomatoes have been planted as an experiment in early ripening varieties.

With a fair yield from the forty acres planted, together with the tomatoes sold by local planters, should make the largest run of tomatoes ever handled by the factory. The demand for northern grown tomatoes, according to I. A. Nelson, manager of the empany, has been far beyond what they could supply, because of the finer flavor and greater sugar content in the northern grown fruit over that grown in the southland.

CARE OF THE EYES

The use of electric lights may be very hard on the eye-sight, especially if improperly used. Daylight is much better if it is possible to get it at one's work. When doing fine work, the light should shine over one's left shoulder. One can so arrange his position to make it do that.

The blue electric light bulbs, or "daylight bulbs" as they are called, are easier on the eyes than the colorless ones. It is very hard on the eyes to work with the light shining directly from uncolored bulbs, when the wires can be seen. The bulb should be either frosted or blue. It should not be too near to the work. A table lamp is bad for a worker who sits at a table and reads or writes. The reading lamp, when the book is held nearer one's lap, is all right.

The kitchen light is usually poor. It usually hangs in the center of the room and is a dim light. The worker can waste much time hunting for tools and not seeing well to do the work eficiently. If the light is a center light, it should be a large daylight bulb. Better yet, there should be several lights, arranged conveniently over sink and work tables.

Eye strain is due to too bright light, a light too close, or too dim. Each night one should drop a few drops of boric acid solution into each eye, to strengthen and cleanse the eye. This will help keep the eyes strong and bright.

A CHILD'S APPETITE

In the old days, when children had only plain, nourishing foods, they had good healthy appetites. Now they have become finicky because they have tasted, if not lived upon, everything which pampered adults eat: tea, coffee, highly seasoned foods and too many sweets.

Thef ood for a child should be well cooked and easily digested. Children do not like to eat things which look mussy or are not attractive, or are served in such large quantities as to discourage them. Dainty servings, nicely served will look more choice and appealing.

Children should be fed regularly. Their stomachs are small and cannot hold enough for a long period. They are many times more active than adults and are growing, both of which increase their need of nourishment. To feed a child too often overworks its stomach.

A WORKER'S CODE

A good job may be easier to get than to keep. The dame of fine appearance may land a position which she lacks the brains to make good in. To have and to hold a desirable place in the business world, the following worker's code will help:

1. I will respect all useful work and be courteous to the workers.
2. I will know my work and have an ambition to do it well.
3. I will take the initiative and develop executive ability.
4. I will be industrious and willing.
5. I will be honest and truthful.
6. I will educate myself into strong personality.
7. I will be faithful to my work.
8. I will be loyal.
9. I will be a lady.

The world does not owe me a living, but I am proud to make a good living for myself.

ENTERTAINING COMPANY

The secret of entertaining company without fuss and flurry is wise planning ahead of time and the choosing of dishes which may be prepared well in advance. The first thing to do when expecting company is to plan the menu, and have all the things ordered from the shops a day ahead. Select a pudding which may be made the day before or at least early in the morning. Wash the ingredients of your salad hours ahead of time and lay them away in the ice box folded in a damp cloth. Get the meat on to cook early, peel your potatoes, shell the peas, stir up the gravy thickening before you clean up the house.

The dusting and straightening can be done with a serene mind if dinner is on the way. The written menu saves one the anxiety of keeping many trifles on one's mind. The last hour before the company meal may be reserved for the hostess to dress herself and be fresh as a rose, and then finish up the little things which just have to be done at the last minute.

FOR SANDWICHES

Use baking powder cans for baking bread for sandwiches. They make attractive round loaves. Fill the can half full of dough and it will rise to level. One advantage of the round cans is that they will fit together nicely in the oven with little waste space. Being small, the loaves will bake in less time than large loaves. To make the children happy, bake the small round loaves, seasoned first with brown sugar and cinnamon, and speckled with raisins.

BAKED BANANA

As a dessert, try the baked banana. Melt a bit of butter in a frying pan; place halfves of peeled bananas in it; sprinkle with brown sugar and fry to a golden brown. When you take up a banana, squeeze a little lemon juice over it.

Those Dear Girls

Made—I don't bear Jack any malace, but I hope he'll be thoroughly unhappy.

Marie—Make sure of it by marrying him.

A Feminine Trick

"One dozen black hens' eggs, please," demanded the artless maiden.

"If you know the difference between a black hen's egg and any other hen's egg you can pick them out," said the shopkeeper, scornfully.

Demurely the artless maiden helped herself to a dozen of the biggest eggs in the shop, and left smiling. The device was one she had often found profitable.

Profitable Hog Feeding

Here are a few tables for the farmer to study who wants to make the most out of his hogs:

12 bushel Corn	$10.20	7 bushel Corn	$ 5.95
Hogs sell at	8.00	40 lbs. Tankage	1.35
Loss	$2.20	Profit	.70
5 bushel Corn	$4.25
50 lbs. SPEAR Hog Feed	1.40

All based on cost of producing 100 lbs. of pork selling at $8.00 per 100 lbs.

We have a lot of feeders using the SPEAR Hog Feed and they all say the same thing—that it is the cheapest and the best feed that they ever used.

We have just unloaded another car. We would like to have you give it a fair trial by using one or two bags; then let us make you a price on ton or half ton lots.

We have a full line of BABY CHICK FEED, so we can take care of the late hatches.

News About Iowa People and Events

Under date of March 25th, John B. Hungerford, Jr., of Carroll, on a journey around the world, writes that "I have just come from Siam where I met Prof. A. C. Bailey, former Ames professor, who is in the Physics Department of Chulalongkorn University, the Siamese National university. Prof. and Mrs. Bailey and their two children came to Bangkok last August and will be there some three years longer. Both Mr. and Mrs. Bailey are Oskaloosa people, both graduates of Penn college and lived in Ames up til last summer, the former being on the instruction staff of Iowa State College. Prof. Bailey came to Bangkok under the auspices of the Rockefeller Foundation and is thoroughly enjoying his work in Siam. The university has full instruction in colleges of medicine, engineering and the arts and sciences. All courses in higher education are given in the English language instead of Siamese. Another interesting point which links this university with Iowa is the fact that the standard text book used is the one written by Prof. Louis B. Spinney, head of the physics department at Ames." Siam is an independent kingdom, located between India and Indo-China. It required just one month for Mr. Hungerford's letter to travel from Manila to Des Moines.

The state board of control has made plans to have a number of articles used by the prisoners at Anamosa and Fort Madison made by them. It is also planned to have various articles used in other state institutions manufactured by prison labor. The state institutions will be furnished with shoes, soap, tin and aluminum, sheets, pillow cases, brooms, brushes and men's clothing of their own making. In the prison shop nearly 150,000 sheets and that many pairs of pillow cases will be made, 6,000 shirts will be tailored and 5,000 night gowns and shirts turned out. Making of soap is a new venture in the state prison program and the product will be distributed to the fifteen state institutions. For work done in prison, the inmate is given 25 cents a day. This can be used to purchase luxuries or saved. Most of them save, the board members found in a recent survey.

An old land mark in the vicinity of Dubuque disappeared when the old Rockdale flouring mill was consumed recently by fire. It was reputed to have been the first" grist" mill in the state, the original having been constructed of logs away back in 1843. Some years later a frame structure was erected and this was followed by a stone building in 1854 and it was this that was gutted by fire. The Rockdale mill ceased operation in 1905. Many early settlers in northeastern Iowa are yet living who secured flour from that old mill.

In a bulletin sent out from Iowa State College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts at Ames, George H. Von Tungelin, J. F. Thaden and E. L. Kirkpatrick of the rural sociology section, make a report on a survey made of the cost of living on 472 farms in four districts of Boone, Story and Sac counties. Total average annual expenditures of owner families was $1,875.90, of tenant families $1,506.40, and of hired men's families $1,431.50. Home grown products furnished an average of 40.3 percent of the owner families' living, 42.8 percent of the tenant families' living and 41.1 percent of that of hired men's families. Clothing expenditures constituted more than a third of the total.

E. L. Redfern, chief chemist of the Iowa Department of Agriculture has been advised of the presence of worthless citrus fruit being shipped from Florida. This information is contained n a letter sent out by Dr. Arthur E. Paul, Chcago, in charge of the Bureau of Chemistry. In his letter of warning to the Iowa authorities Dr. Paul says "As a result of low temperatures in the state of Florida, occurring on January 11th, 12th and 15th, 1927, much of the citrus fruit, viz oranges tangerines and grapefruit, then ripe or ripening on the trees, was frosted, and such of the citrus fruit which was frosted, has now become more or less dry. Since citrus fruit which has lost a material percentage of its juice is essentially worthless, the sale of such fruit to the public constitutes fraud, and the Bureau of Chemistry, enforcing the Federal Food and Drugs Act, is now intensively engaged in preventing the distribution of such fruit to the public, fifty cars having already been seized.

For half a century a woolen mill flourished at Nashua, Chickasaw county. A dam across the Cedar river at that point furnished power for many years, but in more recent times steam was also used. On two different occasions the factory was badly damaged by fire, the last visitation being in 1926. The Commercial club at Cedar Falls made the woolen mills company an offer of a large stone factory building in that city and this was accepted and so the plant has been located there. The building donated was at one time owned by Harris & Cole brothers, the largest manufacturers of wooden pumps in the world, when such things were all the rage. In more recent years iron pumps have taken the field. The woolen mills at Nashua turned out "Nashua Blankets," famous all over the country. During the world war the managers had a large government contract. The factory gives employment to 80 girls.

Jones county farmers are purchasing corn shipped into that section from central Iowa. Thus far some 30 cars have been received and distributed among farmers to be used for feeding purposes. It cost from 87 to 93 cents per bushel laid down. Corn is also being shipped from several Iowa points to southern Kansas where drouth and hot winds prevented a crop last year. The year before Iowa feeders shipped corn from that same section.

Corn syrup factories at Cedar Rapids and Clinton have a large market for their products in Chicago where the manufacturers of a candy bar utilize about two car loads every day. This firm manufactures eleven other varieties of candy besides this one bar but of the latter 32 solid train loads were shipped to the trade in February and March. An idea of the amount of raw material this one candy concern uses may be formed when it is known that the freight tonnage yearly amounts to approximately 500 carloads of sugar, 1,000 carloads of chocolate, 500 carloads of milk, 500 carloads of corn syrup, 40 carloads of shredded imported cocoanut, 80 carloads of paper wrappers, 1,500 carloas of peanuts, 420 carloads of cases, 4,000 carloads of empty set-up boxes, 150 carloads of premiums for sales assortments, 310 carloads of miscellaneous materials, all inbound, and 9,000 carloads of finished products, outbound, a grand total of 18,000 carloads in and outbound freight. Of the material consumed Iowa contributes the larger volume of the 1,000 carloads of corn syrup and milk. This concern uses one-fifth of all the peanuts grown in the United States.

Here is a human interest story that concerns Simpson college at Indianola. One of the alumni is a missionary in India, representing Methodist church. He wanted his son, now a young man, to get his college education at Simpson, so the lad left Calcutta in January, 1926. It is a long journey, 12,000 miles to America, and the young fellow stopped for sight-seeing enroute, so when he reached Indianola three or four months later, he was too late to start the semester and decided to get a job. He worked at any old thing, finally getting a job of dishwashing in a restaurant. Contrary to most youngsters in such work, he seems to have likged it, and was promoted to waiter. Then he bought the cafe and is now owner and reports say he has a nice clean place, and, of course, gets student patronage and possibly he may entirely overlook the fact that he came to America to get a college education.

In the big orchard district on paved highway No. 32 in eastern Polk county, apple growers have been maintaining booths by the roadside every day the past winter when the weather was not too cold. Auto travelers were ready customers and thousands of bushels of choice fruit was disposed of at good prices. Apples are kept in thoroughly ventilated pits that are maintained at a temperature but slightly above freezing. Such fruit keeps better when removed than does that kept in cold storage with artificial refrigeration.

An unusual event is reported from Adams county. Warner Cady, a farmer, was doing some farm work, when a recent snow visited that section. A blast of lightning as the snow was falling in large flakes struck within 20 feet of where Mr. Cady was walking, making a large hole in the ground. Mr. Cady was badly stunned and it required several days and the presence of a doctor to restore him to normal conditions. Sharp lightning during a heavy snow fall may be regarded as a freak.

Charge for Small Checking Accounts

For a long time we did not believe the small checking accounts were so numerous; or that our loss with them was as large as it is.

In checking our books we find 290 checking accounts with a balance of less than $50.00 each. The total balance of these accounts is $3,245.00. One-half of the checks we handle each day are drawn on these accounts.

Clerical expense and cost of Checks, Pass Books, Ledger Supplies, etc., have increased to such an extent that we are compelled to make a small charge.

Beginning with July 1st, 1927, a charge of 50 cents per month will be made on checking accounts that have a minimum balance of less than $25.00. This, however, would not apply to accounts of religious societies, lodges, schools and the like; or, when not more than three checks per month are charged against the account.

On checks that are returned for "want of funds" a charge of 25 cents per check will be made.

If you have to borrow $25.00, it would cost you $2.00 per year, which is very cheap for the benefits derived from a checking account.

With the above arrangement, we believe that most of the costs incurred with these smaller accounts will be paid by those who find checking accounts an advantage.

The 50 cent charge has not been instituted with the idea of collecting this charge, but to induce a balance of over $25.00.

OBITUARY OF ROWAN MAN

OBITUARY

Sephores Hillegas Kline was born at Terysville, Penn. on January 6, 1841 and departed this life at the home of his son at the ranch near Alamosa, Colorado, June 23, 1927, at 3:45 p. m., being 86 years, 5 months and 17 days of age.

He was united in marriage to Lucinda Cressmon at Terysville, Penn. December 5, 1863. Unto this union were born two children, Alfred C. Kline, of Alamosa and Ada Azeltine, who preceded her father in 1920, since which he has made his home with his son and family in Colorado.

He was bereft of a true helpmate with the passing of the wife and mother on November 21, 1907.

He united with the German Lutheran church when a young man, transferring his membership to the Methodist church of Rowan a few years ago.

Major Francis St. Austell, of Des Moines, president of the Iowa Radio Listeners League, was present at the radio conference in Washington recently, W. D. Jamieson, formerly of Shenandoah, now of Washington, represented the Henry Field and Earl May broadcasting stations of Shenandoah, at the conference. Iowa radio fans, who have been greatly annoyed because of the large place given advertising programs by the Shenandoah and other interests, will be interested in a press report sent from Washington during the conference which stated that "much was heard of the proposition, advocated by Major St. Austell tnd the Iowa Radio Listeners League, that the listeners must be given first consideration. The apparent disposition of the radio commission is to deal with the questions before them from the listeners' standpoint."

The Marian county fair at Knoxville will have free admission at the gates next fall and concessions will be charged a higher fee in order to make up the loss. Concessionaires are not adverse to the plan as they contend that such an arrangement will so increase the attendance as to greatly stimulate their business. The Kansas state fair at Topeka made the experiment a few years ago but found it impracticable.

Polk county farmers residing on paved roads have been able to haul their hogs by truck to the Iowa Packing Company's plant in Des Moines all through the long mud blockade. Bad roads made it difficult for the packing house to secure the hogs needed for immediate slaughter and thus a premium was paid. On previous occasions Polk county farmers received a bonus because of the bad roads where not paved.

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I.—Garth Guthrie, Canadian war veteran, having to live in the open on account of weakened lungs, is factor of a Hudson's Bay post at Elkwan. He came back from the conflict with a permanently scarred face, which he realizes cost him the love of his fiancee, Edith Falconer. Sir Charles Guthrie, his brother, is a millionaire war profiteer.

CHAPTER II.—With Etienne Savanne, halfbreed, his firm friend, Garth meets Doctor Quarrier, geologist, and his sister Joan. Their schooner has drifted ashore. Quarrier complains he has been robbed by a man known as "Laughing McDonald" or to the Indians as "McDonald Ha! Ha!" because of a scar which gives him a perpetual grin. McDonald is Garth's competitor for the fur trade. At Elkwan an Indian girl, Ninda, tuberculosis victim, whom Garth has befriended, is dying. Quarrier hints that Ninda is Garth's mistress, which is hotly resented. Joan, trained war nurse, cares for Ninda, but the girl dies.

CHAPTER III.—Garth tells Joan part of the reasons for his presence at Elkwan. He takes the Quarriers to Albany, from whence they can proceed to Montreal. Charles Guthrie writes reproaching his brother for not coming home. Charles' wife assures him Ethel still loves him, but Garth in his heart knows better. His scarred face has separated them.

CHAPTER IV.—Three of McDonald's party visit Elkwan seeking to buy gun shells. From them Garth learns of evil talk among the Indians concerning him and Ninda, and realizes Quarrier will spread his version of the affair.

"We got twelve—fifteen hunter dere. Attawapiskat and Kapiskau got more dan dat."

"That means a lot of fox pelts if the mice and rabbits are plentiful, and the litters came through the summer."

It was true. Cut off from the island until the ice set hard, as the post was, while the hunters could reach the schooner wintering at Seal Cove and get more for their fur, the outlook was indeed gloomy. But Garth had no idea of allowing these strangers to come into his territory and take the valuable fox trade of Akimiski away from him without a struggle. While he remained in the employ of the company, he would give the best that he had of loyalty and service. His pride was involved; and as he searched for a solution of the problem which the presence of this schooner presented, the desire to beat this free-trader in his bold try for the priceless silver and black fox of Akimiski obsessed his thoughts.

From Graham at Attawapiskat and Boucher at Kapiskau, he anticipated little aid or comfort. The former was an inactive, oldish man with a large up-river trade, and Boucher, according to Cameron at Albany, already in a panic over the rumor of the machine guns aboard McDonald's schooner. So Garth had decided that he would ignore his colleagues on the coast south of him and play a lone hand.

For a space the two men nursed their pipes in silence; then the face of the white man suddenly lighted.

"Saul Souci!" he cried. "Why didn't we think of him before? Etienne, we'll hunt up old Saul and send him to winter on the island. He's got two or three sons there, and besides being Treaty Chief of the Crees, is a sort of medicine man, shaman, isn't he?"

Blowing a cloud of smoke through his teeth, the half-breed grunted his disapproval. "He winter on de Little Elkwan—up een de Winisk countree. Bet weel tak' long tam to find heem."

"Oh, I know it will be difficult to get him across the strait before the ice, but we'll put him over somehow."

"We get frozen een wid our cano' up riviere," protested the hard-headed bushman.

"We'll take a birch canoe and leave it—carry the little toboggan to come out with—the dogs can follow the shore going up," urged the enthusiastic Guthrie.

Knowing the country, Etienne realized only too well the difficulty of traveling between seasons; breaking the young ice in the quiet reaches of the river until compelled to abandon the canoe; then the wait for the closing of the stream and the snow. For weeks the thin ice of the Elkwan would be a trap for the unwary dog team. To the trail-wise Etienne, it was a foolish venture; to the man whose only thought was the salvage of the fox trade, a necessity.

"How you get heem to de island?"

"If the channel and strait are open, we'll take him in the York boat. We can wait for the wind and if there isn't too much flow ice, we'll get him across."

Etienne knocked out his pipe. His bright eyes snapped as he looked at Guthrie. "Eef you say so, I go. But we are two dam' fool."

"But we've got to give these people a fight for that fur—it's worth thousands to us."

"All right, boss, we fight." But when the veteran voyager told his wife of the mad purpose of Guthrie, her dark face grayed with fear at the thought of the November journey over the thin ice of the Elkwan.

For a week, with his two best huskies, Castor and Pollux, and Shot, following opposite banks of the river to avoid fighting, Garth and Etienne poled and paddled and tracked past black spruce and poplar grown shores from the latter of which the frost had stripped the leaves.

At the mouth of the Little Elkwan the winter suddenly shut down, locking lakes and deadwaters with a shell too thick for their battering poles to break a channel through for their canoe, and the men in search of Saul Souci were prisoners. Somewhere up the little Elkwan ran the trap-lines of the man, to reach whom they had slaved for days with ice-crusted poles and paddles, and freezing hands, while their hot breaths rose in columns on the keen air; but until a fall of snow, or some bitter nights to bridge the river trail, they could not move. However, there were five hungry mouths to feet, so they hunted back in the muskeg for caribou. At last, when severe frost had sealed the slower flowing reaches of the river with three-inch ice, they hitched the huskies, and started. Shot, who the winter previous had learned to draw Garth's trapping sled, refusing to team with the larger dogs, ran loose.

The second day out they learned from an Indian that Souci's main camp was two sleeps up the river. And thanks to the trained eyes of Etienne, the sled avoided the traps of shell ice over the swift water and the second night turned in to a winter camp.

At the challenge of his dogs, Saul Souci, Treaty Chief of the Elkwan Crees, lean, grizzled, taciturn, with bony features, over which leather-like skin lined with wrinkles was tightly drawn, pushed through the flap of his tipi.

"Kequay!" he said, showing no surprise at the strange appearance of the Elkwan people one hundred and fifty miles inland at a time when no sane Indian traveled the river. The three shook hands and, first feeding and chaining the dogs to trees, entered the smoky tent where Saul's wife and two sons were eating from a copper kettle.

Not until his guests had been served with caribou stew and tea did Souci question them as to the purpose of their coming. Then he said in Cree, which Etienne interpreted to Garth: "You take a hard moon to travel up the Elkwan."

"We could not wait, so started in the canoe," replied Etienne in the same language.

"You did not break through the ice."

"No."

"The geese have passed: it will not be long now until the big snow," vouchsafed the hunter, lighting his pipe.

"How are the game signs since the snow?"

"There are plenty of mink and otter, but the lynx and fox seem to have left the valley."

Etienne's eyes brightened at the remark.

"There is much fox sign on Akimiski." This was hearsay over a month old, but the half-breed knew he would need every possible argument to gain Souci's ear to his proposition.

"My sons will be glad. Three of them are there."

"We have come to talk to you about the island."

"I told you at the spring trade I would not go."

"But there is much news since then," replied Etienne in the same colorless tones as the other.

"News? What has happened?"

Then the astute Savanne displayed his knowledge of the Indian temperament. Slowly, without emotion, he described the coming of McDonald, the free-trader, to the west coast, with a ship full of cheap trade goods, and inferior flour, tea and sugar. It was sudden wealth he was after, and to get it he would bribe the hunters, receive them with what looked like better prices in trade for their fox skins. But in a year—two years—he would be through—would not return, and they would come to the company again, begging for a "debt." But the company, who had taken care of their fathers and grandfathers through many lean years, would remember who had gone to the free-trader. There would be no "advance" for these in the years to come, and their women and children would whimper through the long snows.

He, Saul Souci, a man held in great esteem by the company, could save these hunters from the cheap guns and trade goods of McDonald, who cared nothing for the Crees. The company, whose goods were honest as he knew, whose sugar was not sanded, whose powder never failed, and whose tea soothed the stomachs of the Crees, was as ancient as the hills, and as permanent. It would always remain on the bay to trade with the Indians with goods that never changed. He, Saul Souci, his father and his father's father had been the friend of the Hudson's Bay—had never failed it. Would he fail it now when he was needed to turn the young hunters at Akimiski from their folly?

For a long time the smoke-filled tipi was silent as the swart face of Souci was grave with thought. Avoiding the anxious eyes of his wife, he sat cross-legged staring into the small fire in the center of the wigwam. With eyes red and throat raw from the smoke of the tipi fire, Garth impatiently watched the old Indian's stolid face.

The wife of Saul, unable to stifle her fear, at length loosed upon him a torrent of reproach—only to be silenced by a stern command. At last, the Indian, evidently having come to a decision, turned to the half-breed who waited for his answer.

"My trap-lines reach far into the four winds. My fish and meat cache is heavy. There are many caribou in the muskeg; at Akimiski there are none—only rabbits and wolves and foxes."

Ignorant of the drift of Souci's remarks, Garth watched Etienne's impassive face. Suddenly his heart quickened, as a faint gleam entered the slit-like eyes of his friend. Would old Souci come, after all?

"It is true," continued the Indian, "the company is my friend. It was the friend of my father. It is better that the young men trade with it than with these people who come and go. If I go, how shall I live, for I have no cache at Akimiski? How shall I cross the water if the ice has not set?

Etienne's dark face wrinkled with pleasure. Souci would go. "The company will make you its man, if you will go," he said. "We will set you across the open water in the York boat and give you supplies for the winter, and your sons—what they need. And if you hold the young men, there will be new guns for you and your sons and a debt double the hunt your family brings in." Etienne extended his hand to seal the bargain.

"We may not cross the water before the Christmas trade—then we will lose the fur, for the trade will go to their camps," suggested Saul.

"We will cross you to the island at once, if you will return with us now."

The wife of Saul was already waiting in protest at his decision, but the dark faces of his sons betrayed no feeling.

"My sons and my wife will stay here," said the Indian without a glance at those interested. "I will go down river with you, for the winter will not wait."

Etienne turned to the smiling Guthrie. "You see, he will go with us at once. Now, we will mak' de troubl' for McDonal' Ha! Ha! to get all dose fox skin." And he repeated his conversation with Saul.

* * * * * * *

Through the stinging air of the blue dawn, two dog teams hurried down river. On the second night, arriving at the cache of caribou hung in a tree for the return trip, they found that wolverines had destroyed the meat. To feed seven dogs it was necessary to hunt, for Saul had come with a light sled.

The following morning, as the east grayed, the men started for the neighboring muskeg in search of the early feeding caribou. With Shot, whose rigid war training to absolute silence and obedience made it possible to take him on a still hunt, which was out of the question with the yelping and uncontrollable huskies, Garth waited on the edge of a barren for the light.

"Smell something, Shot?" he asked the dog, who stood beside him in the spruce scrub, dilating his nostrils as he sniffed the keen air. As yet the dusk hung over the white barren in a gray blur. If the blue-coated deer of the north were out there scraping with round-toed hoofs the snow from the moss, the light would soon betray them. Trembling with excitement, for the great airedale had served his novitiate the winter previous on the Raft, and knew for what they waited, Shot tested the air. The man whose mittened hand rested on the shaggy back beside him wondered, as the two crouched waiting for the daylight, if to the memory of his dog returned the ghosts of similar watches in Flemish shellholes and listening posts. As his eyes strained to pierce the graying blanket which shrouded the muskeg, Guthrie found himself tracing the parapets of imagined trenches — listening for suspicious sounds. Then the first light filtered over the barren, and he searched for the gray-blue shapes against the snow.

Suddenly the dog at his side stiffened on his toes, his iron dorsal muscles set, and the tremor which swept the shaggy body, with the suppressed whine, signaled the taint in the air.

"Steady, Shot!"

The trained war dog crouched mute—athrill with the scent of game in his nostrils. Gradually the exploring eyes of the hunter made out dim shapes, a long rifle shot distant. Slowly, with his dog at his heels, Garth circled the barren up-wind under cover of the scrub, until he had an easy shot at two cows and a bull.

"Steady, Shot!" he whispered, and took careful aim. At the flash of the Ross, the bull leaped forward, ran a few feet into the wind and crumpled on the snow. As the bewildered cows circled up-wind, Guthrie fired again. A hurt cow plunged forward, seeking the scrub edging the barren, and reaching it, disappeared.

"Go get 'em, Shot!" Like a wraith, the airedale crossed the barren in pursuit, as Guthrie followed, upbraiding himself for his poor shooting. A hundred yards inside the scrub he found the caribou pulled down and dispatched by the dog.

Replacing his rifle in its skin case and resting it against a spruce, Garth was hastily dressing out the meat before the hide froze, while Shot explored the game trails of the vicinity, when a low laugh sounded behind him. Looking up, he saw, watching him, the Ojibwa, Joe Mokoman, who called himself the father of Ninda.

Guthrie casually rose to his feet, skinning knife in hand, as he measured the sinister face of the man who faced him, fingering the action of his gun. It was clear from the glint in the small eyes that the Ojibwa still nursed the memory of his expulsion from the trade-house. How far would he dare go? Garth asked himself.

"Bo'-jo'! The caribou are fat this year," he said coolly, moving toward the Indian. But the Ojibwa pointed the muzzle of his rifle at Garth's chest as he stepped forward.

"You move, I shoot!"

The threat of the despised Indian deeply flicked the pride of the Canadian veteran, but he was helpless. It was inconceivable that Mokoman meant to wreak personal vengeance of such a nature on a Hudson's Bay factor—shoot him in cold blood. Yet what was he after, then?

With a great show of rage and surprise, Garth burst out with: "What

"What Do You Want?"

d'you mean by throwing a gun on me? You know what you'll get for this? What d'you want?"

The Ojibwa leered. "You tak' de woman. You kick Joe Mokoman. W'at you do wid de woman?"

"She is dead," said Garth, quietly.

"You tak' de woman to Albanee. You geeve Joe Mokoman mooch debt?" The face of the speaker knotted with hate of the man who was measuring the distance which separated them and—wondering.

"What do you want—how much trade goods?" temporized the white man as he covertly edged a foot forward in the snow.

"You geeve sled-load; flour, tea, blanket, gun?" The face of the Indian lighted with the thought of the spoil which awaited him at the post.

"You want a four-dog sled-load? Garth scratched his knotted forehead, as if debating the value of the goods. It was twenty feet—he couldn't make it. He must get nearer, somehow, he thought.

The Indian nodded. "Four-dog team—flour, blanket, all de—" With a quick movement he brought the gun to his shoulder as the white man slid a moccasin nearer. "Beka! Stop!" he cried, his swart face purple with rage. "You move, I keel you!"

It was no use. There was no chance of getting close enough for a lunge. Garth changed his tactics as the evil eyes of the other narrowly watched him. Turning his back, Guthrie calmly proceeded to finish the dressing of the caribou.

For a space the Ojibwa stood holding the gun on the back of the white man, his face picturing amazement and doubt. Then he said: "You geeve me dis stuff?"

"Sure," replied the man, busy with his knife, as he mentally groped for a way out of his predicament—puzzled as to whether the Indian would shoot if he rushed him.

"You lie—I feex you!" warned Mokoman.

For a space there was no answer from the man using the skinning knife; then suddenly getting to his feet and facing the Indian, who warily covered him with his rifle, Garth said good naturedly: "You'll get the sled-load," but the eyes of the man who smiled had seen something which had started his heart pounding in his throat. His fingers, blue with cold, shut on the handle of his knife, turning the knuckles white. "Oh, yes! I'll give you—the stuff," said Garth, jerkily, his muscles stiffening like clamped springs as he waited. "You come to Elkwan—and I'll give you—all the stuff—you can—

"Get 'em, Shot!" roared Garth, lunging forward and to one side, while a blur of black and tan catapulted into the Indian's back, carrying him headlong to the snow, as the rifle exploded. With a snap of powerful jaws, the hood of the Ojibwa was torn from his head—a lunge and the long fangs met in the flesh of the shoulder; then Guthrie dragged the maddened dog from the shrieking man who writhed in the snow, arms shielding his face.

With a grip on the collar of the struggling dog, Garth picked up the rifle on the snow and regained his own, while the Indian whined over his lacerated shoulder.

"Well, how about it now?" rasped Guthrie with a hard laugh, stroking the neck of the excited airedale.

"Hold dat dog!" cried the Ojibwa, getting to his feet and backing away from the black and tan fury who strained toward him, hot with lust of battle.

"I'll hold the dog. He won't bother you. And you stay where you are. You're going to tell your story to Saul Souci."

The evil eyes of the Ojibwa widened in surprise. "Souci?" he muttered.

"Yes! Souci is going to Akimiski to watch you people. He'll put devils into some of you before the winter is over. Now what did you throw that gun on me for? I ought to give you a good hammering."

The Indian essayed a smile but his face showed his fear. "I not shoot—I—" Then he asked weakly: "You lie w'en you say you geeve de trade good?"

"I lied," was the dry reply. "Now we'll start for the lake. Mush!"

When Etienne and Saul returned from the Muskeg, Garth told his story.

"By gar, dat good dog, Shot!" And Etienne rubbed the dog's ears.

"Yes," and Guthrie took the hairy head in his hands as he smiled into the dog's worshiping eyes. "He did the trick for Garth, didn't he?" he said as he bent and rested his face against the airedale's neck.

"Dis man, I t'ink cum up riviere for McDonald Ha! Ha!" said Saul.

"You think he is working to get the up-river trade away from us, too?"

Garth turned to Etienne. "So McDonald is out to swamp us—hog all the fur this year? Well, we'll give him a fight for it, Etienne," he said, savagely smarting with stung pride at the cool attempt of the free-trader to steal the river trade from under his nose.

"W'at you do wid dis skunk?" And Etienne nodded toward the prisoner, sitting dejectedly on the opposite side of the fire.

Saul looked hard at the white man, who did not answer, then said in Cree to Etienne: "This weasel of an Ojibwa only makes trouble. It is better to send him back to McDonald Ha! Ha! under the ice," and the Cree drew a sinewy hand suggestively across his throat.

At the words and gesture, Joe Mokoman slowly changed color. His hands shook with fear. Drops of sweat stood out on his forehead. The small eyes of Etienne twinkled with amusement as he repeated the remark to his chief.

"It would serve him right, Saul, but I want him to take a message to McDonald."

That morning, with sleds heavy with caribou meat, the three started for Elkwan with the agent of McDonald Ha! Ha!

CHAPTER VI

When the last ice-cap, which imprisoned the north, receded, leaving in its wake the great inland sea of Hudson's bay with its long arm piercing the hinterlands to the south, among the many islands scattered in its track, by far the largest was Akimiski. And through the centuries Akimiski came to be known as a favorite haunt of the black, the black-cross, and the silver-gray foxes. And each winter, the Hudson's Bay company sent hunters there to seek the precious pelts. Then came the Revillon Freres, and they also sent men to winter on the island, for the spoil of its wind-harried tundra, which paralleled the west coast for sixty miles, was priceless.

And now to this land of the little foxes of the glossy black and silver pelts, for which fair women would pay fabulous prices in the markets of the world, had sailed the schooner of a stranger seeking the loot of the Akimiski barrens—a man of daring, who had sailed straight to the course, and whose little schooner already lay locked in the shore ice of Seal cove. Here, while the tides, freighted with broken ice, still patroled the strait, barring the birchbarks of daring hunters, cutting off the shore posts from all trade, McDonald Ha! Ha! was prepared to welcome the trappers of Akimiski with his flour and sugar and tea, his tobacco and cloth and gewgaws.

Garth Guthrie sat in his trade-room with old Saul and Etienne, in council of war. For days after their return from up river, the wind had made the strait impassable to the York boat, which had been left at its summer anchorage in the channel for this use. The tide had kept the lower river open and with the right wind the thing could be done, Garth had reasoned. But the Indians had shaken their heads. It was sure madness not to wait for the cold, which would set the ice far out from each shore. Then they might hazard it with the canoe on the sled.

As for Joe Mokoman, he had spent the days in whimpering over the sudden death which awaited him in the attempted crossing. But Guthrie had a message for McDonald, which Mokoman was to carry. It was the penalty, Garth told him, with a twinkle of the eye, for throwing a gun on a Hudson's Bay factor.

But the severe frost might hang off for weeks, until after Christmas, in fact; and the hunters would take their fur to the schooner, Guthrie argued, and the man who had lived for four years with risk in each breath he inhaled, in every measured minute, insisted that the attempt be made to cross the strait at once. So one morning they put out with a westerly wind and by much rowing and battering and dodging of drifting ice, landed Saul with his dogs, and Mokoman, on the shore ice of Akimiski, ten miles across the strait from Elkwan point.

Saul set out with his dog team for the camp of his sons, while the Ojibwa started down the coast with Guthrie's letter to McDonald, which ran:

"Mr. McDonald,

"Schooner Ghost, Seal Cove, Akimiski Island.

"Dear Sir:

"The bearer of this letter, Joe Mokoman, the Indian you sent up river to steal the trade from me, is returned to you with thanks. He tried to ambush me at Elkwan lake, and it is solely owing to the fact that I could use him as a messenger, that you look upon his handsome face again.

"The purpose of this communication is to announce that, as you intend to hog the trade of Akimiski from your strategic position at Seal cove, I shall use my position on the Elkwan to insure that trade going to me alone, so you may spare yourself the trouble of sending any more Indians up river, for you'll never hear of them again. As to the island trade, I was here first, and I'm going to fight you for it.

"GUTHRIE, ELKWAN."

Then the two men started back in the leaking York boat, and after a day of slavery at the sweeps, with the help of the northeast wind and the tide, reached Elkwan, and warped the craft up out of harm's way to her winter berth on the high shore.

The fight was on, but the saving of their share of the Christmas trade in foxes, when the pelts were prime, depended on the ice. Saul had a free hand to pick up all the skins he could get hold of for Guthrie at a good price if the Indians would wait, but the lure of the schooner's trade-goods, within easy reach, would be too much for the mercurial Crees, unless the strait froze and they could cross to Elkwan for the New Year's festivities. The strait impassable, Garth and Etienne knew that the bulk of the valuable fur would go to McDonald. That was the problem they faced as they sat in the trade-house on their return, and made their plans.

"What makes you think that Saul can get them to hold their fur and keep away from the schooner?" Guthrie asked. Since Etienne's two evenings of smoke talk with old Saul, in his shack at Elkwan, before the Treaty Chief was landed on the island, the head man had acquired an optimism which somewhat puzzled his superior.

The black eyes of the half-breed snapped. "I t'ink Saul weel mak' de medicin' for dem. He ees beeg shaman wid dose Elkwan an' Kapiskau Cree."

"Can he control all his own people?"

"Some ov dem—some not, mebbe."

"What has medicine making got to do with getting our share of the trade, anyway?"

Again Etienne's leather-skinned face broke into a net-work of fine lines as his eyes lighted with amusement. "You see, M'sieu' Guthrie, w'en he start to work."

Garth was interested. He had thought only of Saul's influence as Treaty Chief. The use of magic in the defeat of McDonald's plans lent a new angle to the matter.

"You mean that he's going to hold a pow-wow of some kind and declare that the schooner is bad medicine—haunted by evil spirits?"

"Well," mebbe he have dream dat schoonair breeng bad luck, yes. Mebbe he see devil on dat schoonair, I don' know. He tell me he weel mak' de medicine-lodge on de island."

"Well, I'll be d—d!" It had never entered Garth's mind that the reputation of old Saul as one having intimate relations with spirits, good and evil, could be put to use on the island. But the wily old Cree had evidently taken it for granted that he was to set his powers as a conjurer against the odds which confronted the factor of Elkwan.

"Etienne, it's a great idea! If he can bewitch that schooner, we'll lick 'em yet!"

"Old Saul say he not know what he do. Some hunter ovair dere are stranger. He tak' de dog an' go see dem, den he mak' medicine-lodge and breeng all the Injun to hear de spirit talk."

The idea was masterful. If the old shaman could convince the hunters of Akimiski that the schooner was "tabu," forbidden ground to the Crees—that it was the haunt of demons and spirits who had taken this method to lure the Crees to perdition, he could hold much of the trade for Elkwan. Nervously pacing the floor, Guthrie voiced his enthusiasm for old Saul's plan.

"Etienne, if he can bewitch the schooner, we'll make them work to get that fur. Why, we can use the very name against them—'The Ghost.' Haunted with devils! The Devil Ship! That's the idea! Laughing McDonald may not get the haul he figures on, after all."

THIS WEATHER WILL MAKE A CORN CROP

After a spring of cold, incessant rains, the weather man turned over a new leaf the first of this week and gave us some real hot Iowa summer weather. Coming without any previous warm weather, the heat has seemed unusually sticky. The warm weather, however, is doing wonders to the corn crop, which in most places is from one to three weeks behind. It will hustle the corn to be "knee high" by the Fourth, but with a continuation of this warm weather there is a prospect for a good corn crop. But as July and August make the corn in Iowa, it all depends upon the weather.

During a recent sleet storm a government airplane carrying mail was forced to land on the emergency field near Casey, over the line in Adair county. After the accumulation of sleet and ice had been removed the pilot asked Charles Soderburg, a young farm hand in the neighborhood who had been attracted to the field by the airplane's landing, to start the engine by giving the propeller a vigorous spin. After doing so the young man failed to get away promptly and the propeller struck his nose, cutting off the end of it and making two bad gashes on his wrist. Inasmuch as the pilot was in the employ of the government it is expected that a special appropriation from congress will be sought in order that the young man may be recompensed for the injury sustained.

Just now when general interest centers in the poultry industry it were well to visit the "henery" of Joseph Engel on his 22-acre farm near Delhi, Delaware county. In addition to having ten breeds of standard chickens and eight of Bantams he has nearly 100 pheasants of three different kinds, he raises fantail pigeons and this winter he sold twenty-seven peafowl.

F. L. Mortimer went to St. Paul, Minnesota last week Monday, where he attended the fourth annual Chicago, Great Western R. R. Co.'s veterans' convention. This convention was of employes who have been in the service 25 years.

Kinseth's Store News

Here's hoping you have a regular time the Fourth! This kind of weather ought to make a regular old-fashioned Fourth of July. Remember? When the kids went barefoot, ran in the street races, consumed enormous quantities of lemonade and candy, and came home at night with burned fingers from exploding firecrackers! Them was the happy days!

And speaking of candy, reminds us that we have a very Special Bargain this week on Fudge Candy, in pounds, at 28c a pound. Better stop and get a pound for the Fourth.

This warm weather naturally turns ones thoughts to how a slice of ice cold, sweet juicy watermelon would taste. We have the melons—and you know watermelons and the Fourth go together.

Peaches in gallons, No. 10, at 59c.

Remember this is the last month on coupons.

Too hot to say much this week, so just remember you can get everything you need for that picnic dinner at The Store on the Corner.

We can furnish sweep rakes of the style and capacity that will prove most profitable in your hay fields. Every one of them has that flexibility which permits them to follow uneven ground and rake clean.

Dain Stackers have spring hay retainers, double-A frames, long cushion springs, extension sills, and other exclusive features. They place the hay in the center of the stack, making the center solid. Stacks built with Dain Overshot Stackers settle right and shed rain.

Stop in the next time you are in town and ask us about the Dain line of hay tools—the most up-to-date line of labor-saving, service-giving hay tools on the market today, and for the past thirty-nine years.

The judge in Federal court at Fort Dodge has set Thursday, August 4, as the date for sale of the Belmond sugar factory, under the foreclosure of the mortgage held by the Dyer Construction Co., builders of the plant. Time of sale is set at 10 a. m. at the Federal Building in Fort Dodge.

Rev. Batton gave a good talk based on "Friendship." The M. E. choir had charge of the music.

Interment was made in the Clarion Cemetery.

DEMONSTRATION ON LIFE SAVING TODAY

Yesterday and today, a representative from the national Red Cross organization demonstrates First Aid and Life Saving in the water. The demonstrations are being given at Wilson's Point, Lake Cornelia, and are attracting quite a bit of attention. The gentleman in charge, Walter Wicks, of Ames, belongs to the Life Saving Corps, and is familiar with every branch of the work. He was secured by the local chapter of the Red Cross to put this work on for the benefit of the community. Anyone can avail themselves of his instruction and assistance. If you desire private instructions, he will be glad to arrange them for you if you will get in touch with him, thru A. H. Skovlin, this morning.

Yesterday afternoon and evening, the Junior Division was given instruction and demonstration at Lake Cornelia. This Thursday afternoon, starting at 2:30, the Senior Division will receive instruction.

Among the various points the instructor will bring out and give instructions on, are the following:

How can a rescuer, in approaching a drowning person, avoid being grasped by him?

Why is it dangerous to delay the application of artificial respiration?

If a person is brought from the water unconscious, but breathing, is artificial respiration necessary?

If artificial respiration is administered, how long should the process be continued, if no results are seen?

Is it true that a person "comes up three times" before drowning?

Is it advisable to remove clothing before attempting to make a swimming rescue?

What can be done to remove muscle cramps while in the water?

Besides these questions, many others of great benefit will be answered, and on many of them practical demonstrations will be given. This life saving and first aid instruction is something of real value to everyone, and should be taken advantage of, while Mr. Wicks, a trained swimmer and life saver, is here to give it.

An evening demonstration, beginning at 7 o'clock, will also be given at the lake.

Give Answers To Questionnaires

Luncheon Club Is Given A Survey of Answers Sent

At the Luncheon Club last Thursday, the program was in charge of R. A. Rankins, who gave a short report on the questionaires recently mailed to the business and professional men of the town. Brief quotations were given from replies to the questions, showing the attitude taken toward various community problems, and the ideas of the various business men regarding securing more business and advertising the community.

Some interesting thoughts and points were brought out, and the trend of thought among the business men was clearly shown. There was a unanimous opinion on some of the questions asked, while others were very evenly divided. A more detailed report of the answers to the questionaires will be given at a later date, in The Independent. No names were signed to the questions, and no one knows who the persons were that answered them. The idea of the questionnaire was to secure the frank, honest opinion of the various business men on a number of community problems, and to secure a survey of the field with the hope that something worth while and workable could be secured for community endeavor and betterment.

Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Leu Mrs. R. C. Morse, and Miss Lois Morse left last week by auto for Spooner, Wisconsin, where they will visit Minor and Stan Morse who are farming there.

Meet Friday To Talk Celebration

Business Men Asked To Meet With Legion Tomorrow

Business men of Belmond are requested to meet with the American Legion tomorrow, Friday evening, July 8, at 8 o'clock, at the Legion Hall, to discuss the matter of a community celebration in Belmond this summer. The Legion is desirous of having every business man or a representative present. The idea of the meeting is to determine the sentiment of the business men on a celebration. If they desire it the Legion will co-operate in putting such a community celebration on. This meeting will probably determine whether a celebration will be held.

A social time will be enjoyed, and the Legion will serve refreshments to their guests. All Legion men are requested to be present at this meeting.

WALTERS-SMITH

Mr. Frank Walters of Belmond and Nettie Smith, of Lone Tree, Iowa, were united in marriage at the Methodist parsonage, last Wednesday, June 30, the pastor, Rev. Snyder, officiating. The ceremony was performed at 4 o'clock.

Rev. and Mrs. Guldseth had a pleasant visit last week from Mrs. Guldseth's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Christianson, of Minneapolis.

CONSOLIDATION ANNOUNCEMENT

This week's edition is the first issue of the consolidated Herald-Press and Independent. The two papers were combined in a deal completed last week, wherein The Independent purchased the business and good will of The Herald-Press.

A large amount of work has been necessary in arranging the consolidation of the two papers, and many details had to be worked out before this issue was printed. Consequently, with the limited time available, it is not as good as was hoped. Within another week, however, it is probable the consolidation will be running smoothly and more attention can be given the paper.

Those who were reading the continued story in The Herald-Press, will find the continuing installment on page eight. The serial "Bound to the North," is completed in this issue. The feature, "Belmond in the Long Ago" does not appear this week, owing to lack of time, but will be continued as a regular feature.

Subscribers to The Herald-Press who were not receiving The Independent, will receive the consolidated papers during July, if they reside in Iowa. Those residing outside the state will receive two weeks' issues. If they were paid in advance, credit will be given on the combined papers. All subscriptions not paid within the time stated will be removed from the list, as the subscription policy of The Independent, Paid in Advance, will be continued. No increase in price will be made in Iowa, the regular rate of two dollars a year remaining in force. Subscriptions outside the state of Iowa will be $2.50 a year, beginning July 7th, 1927.

No increase in advertising rates is contemplated for the present.

It is the earnest desire and intention of the Publisher to give the people of Belmond and community a better newspaper than they have had before in either paper, and the co-operation of every reader and advertiser is earnestly solicited to realize this desire The combined circulation gives advertisers a much better coverage of the trading territory than has ever been offered before, and will give readers a better coverage of community events than was possible otherwise. You will find The Independent ready to co-operate with you in any way, for the betterment of the community. You will find us fair and just, and ready to assist or help always. The paper is Your paper and will represent your interests.

Farmer Arrests Man For Being Drunk

Clarion Farmer Taken in Tow July 4 By Farmer Who Found Him Drunk

ANY CITIZEN AN OFFICER

Fred A. Maier of Eagle Grove petitions the court for the foreclosure of a mortgage against C. S. and Irene O. Babcock upon their default, in the sum of $1687.75 and costs of action, $56,88 attorney fee and $34.50 for taxes, etc.

Hattie and Kate Caldwell of Eagle Grove vs. Wm. Wehrheim et al is a suit to collect $8859.40 on a past due mortgage. Said note and mortgage was executed to the Citizens State bank of Eagle Grove in March, 1920, and later assigned to the plaintiffs in this suit.

The American Banking Co., of Springfield, Ill., brings suit against G. S. Phillips of Eagle Grove to collect $590.05 as balance due on a note given in payment for an automobile.

It is not generally known but any citizen has authority to arrest a person when he sees said person commit a misdemeanor; also any citizen may arrest a person for felony if they have good reason to suspect said person committed the same. On July 4, a farmer exercised such a right by bringing Chas. Ward to Clarion and placing him in the county jail. Ward drove into his farm yard in a drunken condition. When Sheriff Johnson returned home that evening he found the prisoner safely locked up.

Three Eagle Grove "ladies" were brought to Clarion last week and placed in the county jail on a statutory charge. They were Mrs. Zada Williamson, Mrs. Ada Netland and Mrs. Helen Voight. Saturday Judge Clock sentenced each to five years in the women's reformatory, but suspended the penalty during good behavior, all being paroled to Sheriff Johnson. Judge Clock gave each of the prisoners a good lecture, especially the first named, in whose home most of the parties were pulled. Among other things he said: "Eagle Grove is better off without you and you are better off without Eagle Grove; you are to leave the county at once and behave yourself hereafter or the sheriff will escort you to the penitentiary without further cermony."—Monitor.

AN INDEPENDENT NEWSPAPER

Editorials

With this issue, The Independent presents the first of the consolidated papers. Possession of The Herald-Press was taken July 2, and as Monday was the Fourth, and a holiday, time was extremely limited in arranging the numerous details of the consolidation, combining the two subscription lists and getting out the paper on schedule. In the combined subscription list, advertisers are given a better coverage of their trading field than either paper was able to offer before. A very thorough coverage of the local field is available now, and this field will be extended as time goes on. It is not the intention to make any advance in advertising rates at present, and none will be made until The Independent can offer its advertisers a full coverage of their trading territory. When that is accomplished, a slight raise in rates is probable. The circulation presented now is worth more than it was before, and with extended circulation we believe every advertiser will admit it is worth more. However, there will not be any rate increase at present.

In consolidating the two papers, one thing the publisher had in mind was the coverage of the field for the advertisers. As it was, both papers had gone about as far as it was possible to go in circulation. With the one paper, this circulation is placed in one periodical, resulting immediately in better coverage thru the combination of the two lists. With time in which to work, this circulation will be extended until the field is covered as well as it will ever be possible to cover it. Consolidation is the order of the times, all over the country. Over 3,300 newspapers have consolidated or gone out of business through one cause or another in the past ten years—over 300 a year. Increased costs of operation have played a leading part, but one of the main causes has been the demand on the part of the public for elimination of duplication. The days of the old-time newspaper are past. When J. D. Baker started the old Iowa Valley Press, his total cost for equipment with which to issue the paper was only about $1,000. Today, that amount of money will not even buy a press, to say nothing of the vast amount of other equipment and material necessary. Any newspaper published nowadays must have a steady income in order to meet expenses. Where the field contains but a limited amount of business, consolidation becomes financially necessary if for no other reason.

The publisher of The Independent takes this way of expressing his appreciation and thanks to the friends who have extended co-operation and support, and to assure the new friends and advertisers that their support and co-operation are needed and earnestly desired. We have endeavored to give our advertisers the best coverage possible, and our readers all the news that can be secured. This is your paper; use it! A complete advertising service is maintained in which illustrations of almost any nature are available, and our job is to assist in writing copy when wanted. From our readers we will appreciate any news items they may have, and if they will call us, we will write them. We want to give you the best newspaper you ever had in Belmond, and if you will help us, we will do it!

PLAN ADVANCE ON "SCIENTIFIC FRONT"

Smithsonian Explorers Have Ranged Many Lands.

Washington.—How science ranges the world in a quiet, ceaseless quest for material with which to build fuller conceptions of our universe is well illustrated by the Smithsonian institution's exploration pamphlet for 1926, which is just off the press. The book might properly be called "The Adventure of Science." It describes briefly 35 excursions into the field—if trips to Sumatra, to China, to Algeria, Baluchistan and southwest Africa, to Alaska, may correctly be called excursions.

Their purpose included, among others, the capture of live wild game, the unearthing of buried villages which flourished in prehistoric America, the collection of fossil footprints and fossil elephants and shells, the gathering of ferns in West Indian mountains, and of minerals in Mexico. The short impersonal narratives evoke the picture of men keenly expectant before the curtained stage of nature. They bury forever the dead myth of the "dry-as-dust" character of science.

The introduction to the pamphlet reveals that "during the past year more expeditions in which the Smithsonian was represented have gone out than ever before, and this in spite of the fact that the institution has practically no unrestricted funds for field work."

Field Work Essential.

"Field work is essential to the advance of nearly all branches of science," continues the introduction, "particularly those which the Smithsonian institution is at present engaged in promoting, namely, geology, biology, anthropology and astrophysics. The institution, therefore, embraces every opportunity of putting expeditions in the field to obtain desired information or collections, either under its own auspices through financial assistance from its friends or in co-operation with other agencies which will benefit equally from the work."

The year's expeditions were headed by a 30,000-mile journey to Algeria, Baluchistan and southwest Africa, undertaken by Dr. C. G. Abbot, acting secretary of the Smithsonian, under the auspices of the National Geographic society and the Smithsonian, to select a site for a solar observatory in the eastern hemisphere. He picked Mount Brukkaros among the Hottentots of southwest Africa and the observatory is already functioning there. The purpose of the field work of the Smithsonian's astrophysical observatory, according to Doctor Abbot, has been aimed for the last eight years to solve the question of whether the sun varies, and, if so, what effects on our weather do the changes of solar heat produce?

Another section of Africa—Tanganyika territory—provided the scene for the Smithsonian-Chrysler live-game collecting expedition under Dr. William B. Mann. The expedition brought home about 1,700 live animals for the national zoological park under Smithsonian direction, including a pair of giraffes, five impalla, a greater kudu, an eland, a blue duiker, red duiker, three white-bearded kru, four warthogs and quantities of birds, small mammals and reptiles.

The success of the expedition was made possible by the hearty co-operation of the game department of Tanganyika, and an all-inclusive license from the governor. This proved invaluable, because of the numerous native gamekeepers who were constantly dropping in on the camp, asking to see the license, taking its number and the names of the party and inquiring from the native hunters what the purpose of the expedition was. The license also enabled Doctor Mann to hire 90 porters of the Wamboro and Wambugo tribes, who are so swift that they can run down animals.

Several attempts to capture young rhino failed, due to the absence of young. Adult rhinos charged the party five times, without inflicting serious damage. Doctor Mann refutes the theory that the tick birds warn their hosts of an approaching enemy. These birds cluster thickly on the rhinoceros to eat the ticks which are so abundant on his body. At the approach of any suspicious object the tick birds make a loud twittering, thereby indicating to men the whereabouts of the rhinoceros.

Queen Mary Has Stalls in Stables Tiled Green

London.—The royal stables at Buckingham palace have been renovated and, at Queen Mary's suggestion, every stall has been tiled in jade green. The feeding boxes are of wood, painted white, and the name of each horse is inscribed in black above the stall.

King George takes a great interest in his horses and the royal grooms have to keep them ready for his inspection at any moment. His majesty is a keen rider and often is seen in Rotten row, the horse track in Hyde park, at seven o'clock in the morning during the summer.

His majesty's favorite horse is Anzac. In the next stall to Anzac is Haig, the charger that carried Earl Haig throughout the great war.

Birds Have Colds

Pierre, S. D.—Even birds are subject to colds. Naturalists have decided that hundreds of larks which died near here on the way north were victims of bronchial pneumonia, induced by too early migration.

CHURCHES

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH
B. B. Wright, Minister

Sometime before next Sunday read Psalms 122:1. Not so long ago we saw a statement to the effect that being regularly, weekly present at church worship is a good habit for one to have, and of course we believe that. Last Lord's Day our worship of music was greatly strengthened, the choir and those who aided by special musical numbers, vocal and instrumental, very much helping us to draw near to God.

The Sunday School virtually demands that we say a good word for it. If you were absent last Sunday you may be surprised to learn that there was a real advance over the preceding Sunday, and this augurs well for next Sunday. If you feel the urge to surprise us next Sunday, you find us ready to see you do it. Did some one say something about having a picnic before very long?

ELEVEN VIRTUES

There are eleven great moral traits which the Character Education Institution stresses as important in the charcter building of every child. Are they being taught to your children? These eleven virtues are: Self Control, Good Health, Kindness, Sportsmanship, Self-Reliance, Duty, Reliability Truth, Good Workmanship, Team Work and Loyalty.

Self Control includes control of tongue temper, thoughts and actions, Good Health requires the right food, sleep, exercise, clothes, body and mind cleanliness and good habits.

The person who is kind will bear no grudges or spite, will not gossip, nor be selfish and rude to people. Sportsmanship helps one to play fair, to keep the rules, refrain from cheating, play for the good of the group and not for self glory, and, if necessary be a good loser.

Self Reliance makes one brave in danger; able to think for himself; and, while respecting the advice of others, he will choose and act according to his own idea of right.

Reliability leads one to make good his promises. Truth makes him scorn a lie. Good Workmanship is not satisfied with lazy, slip-shod work, but seeks to do a good job of value and beauty, even when no one sees or praises.

Team-work makes one put away things he has used, for the sake of the team. It makes him do his part cheerfully and encourage others, since gloom depresses all and injures their success. Team-work makes one able to get along well, at any task in which a number are engaged. The "go-it-alone" person may be a dynamo by himself, but he is no good in team-work.

Loyalty should include one's family, school, town, state, country and all humanity. It leads one to strive for the welfare of all things. Verily, it is some task to bring up a child.

TIN KITCHEN

A bachelor housewife has equipped what she calls a "tin kitchen" for light housekeeping. It is a closet just about the width and depth of her tiny gas range. It is all lined with galvanized zinc, even the walls, floor and ceiling being of zinc. The ceiling points upward at the center where there is a small hole to permit the escape of odors, smoke and excess heat. At each side are narrow shelves of zinc for utensils. Pots and pans hang on hooks above and back of the stove. Everything in the tin kitchen is of tin, aluminum or zinc to avoid fire hazard. Everything is detachable except the stove, and everything may be cleaned with gasoline.

To provide work quarters for kitchen operations, one end of the room has a partition five and a half feet high and reaching half way across the end of the room. The living room side is covered with wall board and papered to correspond with the rest of the room. The kitchen side is a cupboard with a wide board, zinc covered, to serve as table-shelf. It is furnished with a three dollar sink, beneath which is a cupboard. Above the sink is a zinc backboard. You cannot imagine a kitchen which is more compact, more sanitary and safe, more convenient, more inexpensive, and more disguised as an inoffensive alcove in a living room.

GRAY HAIR

The older woman with gray hair has a dignity and sweetness which might be envied by the younger woman. Well kept, frequently washed and perfectly coiffed, gray hair is a distinguishing feature and brings one respect and freedom not accorded to youth. Gray hair can take one anywhere without suspicion of evil intent. Gray hair gives weight to one's opinions and permits one the liberty of his convictions.

It also beautifies the complexion and softens the features. Gray hair may be dyed—if one will—but it is a pity to do it, and, if done, should be done only by an expert. One never knows just what color will result if the hair is dyed. It might turn out some of those ugly greenish yellow shades, and look wiry. It might make the face look more severe and wrinkled. Soda and ammonia should not be used on graying hair, for it tends to yellow them. The bluing rinse gives gray hair a pretty tone.

Oliver Cromwell

A MIDDLE-AGED farmer—red and swollen of face, slovenly of dress, dirty of linen, harsh of voice and woefully lacking in dignity—was so disgusted with political conditions in England in the first half of the Seventeenth century that he decided to emigrate to America. King Charles I refused him and his companions permission to go. In doing so the king virtually signed his own death warrant and the death warrant of "the divine right of kings." For the would-be emigrant was Oliver Cromwell.

It was a crucial time in England's history. Queen Elizabeth had been succeeded by James Stuart, son of Mary Queen of Scots. James, "who never said a foolish thing and never did a wise one," was succeeded by his son, Charles I. Charles inherited enough of the vile traits of his grandmother, Mary Queen of Scots, to make him thoroughly untrustworthy, despotic and inconsiderate of the people's rights.

He set aside the wishes of his subjects, as expressed through parliament; levied heavy and unjust taxes; pursued an unpopular foreign policy; was suspected of conspiring against the established religion of England.

In 1642 king and parliament came to an open rupture, and civil war swept England. Oliver Cromwell—farmer, legislator and stanch Presbyterian—was made captain in the parliamentary army. He was an eloquent preacher, but had no knowledge of war. Yet he was quickly promoted to a colonelcy and raised a cavalry regiment of Puritans (nicknamed "Ironsides"), whose powers of prayer and exhortation were only exceeded by their zeal for slaying royalists. With Bible in one hand and sword in the other, Cromwell led his invincible band of psalm-singing fighting men to victory after victory. The king's followers were known as "Royalists" or "Cavaliers"; the parliamentary army, from their close-cropped hair, being dubbed "Roundheads." Little by little, at Marston Moor, Naseby and elsewhere, the Roundheads broke down the royal power, until at last in 1646 Charles fled for refuge to his father's people, the Scotch. The thrifty Scottish lords promptly sold him to parliament (Cromwell being largely instrumental in the "purchase"), and he was brought back to England a prisoner.

Now that the king was captured, parliament did not know what to do with him. Cromwell and others sought for means by which Charles could still nominally reign while parliament should actually direct the government. But they could not trust the shifty monarch. So his adherents were cleared out of parliament, the house of lords dissolved, a special court was chosen and Charles was tried, condemned and in January, 1649, beheaded; Cromwell's name appearing third among the signers of the death warrant. Scotland, Ireland and Wales rebelled against this drastic act and Cromwell successively crushed the three revolts.

Parliament's methods did not wholly suit him, so he disbanded that body by force and formed another composed of his own friends. Two years later parliament made him sole governor of the British commonwealth with the title of "Lord Protector." He ruled wisely and well, winning the approval of the people at large by giving them added liberty. The nobles and the clerical element hated and feared him.

Parliament, wholly under his control, offered him the title of king. But the offer met with scant popularity in the nation at large. Quick to feel the popular pulse and doubtless fearing to share the fate of Caesar, Cromwell refused to accept the proffered honor.

In 1658—in his sixtieth year—Oliver Cromwell died. His son Richard—weak, amiable incompetent—succeeded him as lord protector; but anarchy at once broke out, and General Monk, Cromwell's right-hand man, was instrumental in bringing Charles' son, Charles II, back to England as king. After this restoration, Cromwell's body was dug up from its grave in Westminster Abbey and beheaded. The head was stuck on a pole in front of the abbey and the trunk was hung in chains on a Tyburn hill gibbet. A revulsion of feeling set in. England was tired of blue laws, puritanism, plain dress and piety. Forgetting that those things had saved her from corruption, perhaps from total ruin, the nation swung to the other extreme. Under Charles II gayety, frivolity and extravagance held sway, and Cromwell was denounced as a usurper.

It is hard to form a just idea of Oliver Cromwell. He was the first great republican, and the first Englishman to exploit successfully a government for and by the people. He also built up a political machine and system of bossism that is unsurpassed. His severity may be partially forgiven when one remembers that through that severity alone he was able to hold in check the many unquiet elements in his realm. He was the last and greatest of the Puritans; and with him died the physical power of puritanism in England.

He and puritanism were the strong, distasteful medicine which alone could cure his country's debilitated "body politic." His treatment of Ireland was unpardonable. His government of England was almost ideal.

FREE AIR!

WE'RE going to try out
HERMAN's style of writing
THIS week, because it is
A change for one thing, and
WE can ramble right along
DOING it, while the other
WAY is getting old and a
CHANGE will do us all good.
PROBABLY the Air this week
WILL be rather weak, sort of FLAT tire, if you get us,
LOW pressure stuff, because
WE haven't had time to think
OF anything funny, much less
FEEL that way. This job of MAKING one paper grow where
TWO sprouted before is a
STRENUOUS proposition.
AND Monday being the 4th
NOBODY worked but us and
THE Boss, and we only had
TWO days to get this COMBINED, Consolidated paper
OUT. And as Cato's Vagabonds
HONORED us with their presence
IN the Red Light District
LAST evening we wanted to GET thru in time to hear 'em.
BECAUSE every time they come
DOWN here it costs us
THREE Dollars. Gosh! And we WANTED to get an earful.
AND we're $6 behind now.
EVERY time they've been down
HERE before it either rained
OR it was too cold, and last NIGHT it was so hot!
OH, well, such is life, and
WE'RE glad to have the boys
ANYWAY. Last week we were
AT Dows, Wednesday night, and
THEY have their concerts the SAME night we do, and we LISTENED to their tooters and LOOKED over their crowd and
WE'RE right here to tell you
BELMOND has a Band and some CROWDS, not casting any
ASPERATIONS on our neighbors
EITHER, because they have a
GOOD Band and good crowds
BUT ours is better, and we GET kinda peeved sometimes
WHEN the crowd fails to give the BOYS a hand or a honk after THEY'VE played a good piece.
THERE is only one fellow in
THE Band who isn't human, and
THE rest being human like you
AND us appreciate a vote of THANKS once in a while by WAY of pressure on your LIZZIE horn, and if you're TOO durned lazy to push a
BUTTON the boys can play a
FUNERAL march for you any time.
ALL of which means give 'em
A hand occasionally!
AS you can tell by the gnage
AT the top of this Colyum,
THE pressure has run pretty
LOW so we'll have to stop.
MAYBE next week we can
PUMP it up some more.
MEANWHILE, if your subscription
HAS expired, better get busy.
THANK you!

CHAPTER XIII

Barbanet Is Persuaded.

Selwood got back without further incident, and deposited his queer-looking bundle with care inside a cupboard in the harness-room. Scott had returned and had covered the River quarter, unmolested. His report confirmed all information that Bunty Bartoe's place had not been burned, and, Scott added, was now noisy with Starbuck's following, who, passing in and out, were celebrating their victory.

"Is Starbuck there?" asked Pardaloe.

It was a question Scott could not answer.

Selwood's mind worked as he listened. "I've got to know for sure where Starbuck is," he said, his eyes moving from face to face of those listening about him. "Where's Bull Page?" he asked after a moment's thought. "Get him here quick."

Facing Selwood within a moment and alone with him in the office, the dilapidated but amiable Bull looked as surprised in being summoned at such a moment by the boss as the other men were.

Selwood spoke to him kindly and without haste, and asked an odd question: "Bull, you haven't done the world very much good in your eventful lifetime, have you?"

Poor Bull, greatly taken aback, countered with a sickly smile. "Well—I—hope I ain't done nobody a whole lot o' harm—have I, John?" he asked in his quavering, throaty tones.

"Not to anybody except yourself, Bull, if the truth be told," replied Selwood evenly. "Not half as much harm as I've done, Bull, by a long shot. But tonight there's a chance for both of us to do something for somebody. You've seen that young girl whose father kept the mock-auction store down street, one of the stores that were burned tonight?"

Bull nodded. "I seen her, John."

"Somewhere in this row she's got lost. I'm afraid she's fallen into bad hands. You never can tell what will happen, you know, a night like this."

"Wouldn't want no wimmin folks of mine mixed up in it."

"Then listen," continued Selwood. "I've seen you many times drunk, Bull, trying to make me think you were sober."

Bull nodded as if confessing to the indictment.

"Tonight I want you sober, trying to make everybody else think you're drunk."

Bull saw a flash of humor in the suggestion. "That," he returned, his chin pushed well down into his throat, "ain't goin' to be so awful hard, John, I don't think."

"There's one feature you may not like. But you're entitled, fair and square, to know it now. We may one of us or both of us, get killed."

"Willing to go where you go, John," he replied simply.

Selwood showed his own surprise at the unassuming assent by a longer breath than usual. "John Barleycorn spoiled a man when he got you, Bull," he observed, regarding him gravely.

Bull's smile had long been in rags, but it shone brave through the tatters of his seamy face. He said nothing.

Selwood believed that if any man at the barn could get into Bartoe's that night alive, it would be Bull Page. Bull, though janitor at Selwood's place, left his wages impartially at the various dives along the river front. He thus enjoyed a certain standing in the lower town as well as the upper, and he moved without prejudice among the different factions of the town.

"I don't want to ask you to do anything I wouldn't do myself—if I could," said Selwood, explaining to Bull what he meant to attempt. "But you can get through doors barred against me and against any stranger; and with you to guarantee a stranger, I might make it. Anyway, Bull, if you're game we'll try; and they won't get us both without some kind of a hearing."

Pardaloe and McAlpin were called in. "If you'll hold your men together here a while," said Selwood to Lefever, "we'll know exactly what we are going to do. In, say, ten minutes, John, bring all of them that want to fight down to Bartoe's and maybe they can be accommodated. I'm taking Bull Page with me, and suppose you and Scott come along, Bill," he added to Pardaloe. "If we don't all of us get back, some of us might."

"What are you going to do?" asked Lefever.

"I'm going down to Bartoe's to look around."

"I am, if I can make it," returned Selwood. He began to unbutton his coat. "And I'll borrow your hat and coat and boots if you're willing Bob," he added. As he spoke he took a cap of McAlpin's hanging on a nearby hook and stuffed it into his trousers pocket.

Scott began to take off his coat. Lefever sat partly on the table, with one leg swinging over the edge. He slipped uneasily from his perch and stood before Selwood.

"John," he asked, "what are you actually going to do? You don't honestly mean you are going to try to go into Bunty's place tonight?"

"Why not?"

Selwood was already in Scott's rig. "Nothing is sure, John," he retorted amiably. "When my time comes, it comes."

"As McAlpin would say, you're talking like a blamed fool, John," rejoined Lefever.

Pardaloe grunted. "I'd say you're talking like one yourself, John Lefever, if I didn't owe you sixty dollars. That is," he mumbled, "if you think you can make Selwood change his mind by talking to him. If you're ready," he snapped at Selwood, looking around for his trusty shotgun, "let's go."

Selwood led the way out of the harness-room through the office and down the dark gangway to the back door of the barn. Lefever, still persisting in protest and caution, fastened the door behind the four men.

Separating as they left the barn, Pardaloe and Scott, and Selwood and Bull Page—a definite rendezvous named—worked their way down-town. Surprised at the lull in the fighting, they could only surmise that the Vigilantes were still at bay, with the gamblers still celebrating their victory.

The men stationed outside to guard Bartoe's place, the remaining resort on the river front, offered little impediment to a reasonably close approach. But Selwood, on one side, worked his way between the guards and the building, only to find that some one had sensibly drawn every window curtain and where there were shutters had closed every shutter.

Selwood joined Pardaloe where the latter awaited him on the river bank. "They've got it well hooked up, Bill," he said, looking toward the lone building where all was darkness save when a streak of light shot from the front door as it was opened. "I counted five men outside."

Pardaloe corrected him. "Count four now," he said with a certain grimness. "Rolled one of 'em down the river bank."

"You didn't kill him?"

"Choked him a little, that's all. No," he repeated indignantly, answering a second pointed question, "I didn't kill him. He's just gagged, and tied up tighter'n a bull's eye in fly time. If he wasn't fool enough to roll plum into the river when I started him he's all right. Now, speakin' of plans: I've got 'em laid out for this place, John."

"What are they?"

"Why, simple; I'll fire the back of the place and you pick 'em off when they run out the front. What?"

"Bill," said Selwood impatiently, "I don't know who's in there. If I did I'm not a public executioner. I'm not a Vigilante. I'm just a plain gambler—not a butcher. And how," he continued, overriding Pardaloe's indignation, "do I know Starbuck isn't holding Christie Fyler or her father prisoner in there?"

Pardaloe drew a breath. "To tell the truth," he confessed, "I didn't think about her; the old man wouldn't make so much difference."

Selwood regarded the dim, forbidding outline of the tightly closed, ill-favored joint with half-closed longing eyes. "Before we do anything else, I'm going to take a look inside. I want to see just who's there—and what they're doing, Bill. We can talk a plan over afterward."

"Of course it's only 'maybe,'" admitted Selwood, not unamiably. "Got any whisky with you, Bill?"

Pardaloe, after having so lately declared that no one could budge Selwood in his decisions, tried vainly to dissuade him from the undertaking. It was hopeless, he knew. But there was one thing Pardaloe could do—that was, obey orders.

A few minutes later, a man much under the influence of liquor, if one's nose could be trusted, for he strongly smelled of it, approached unsteadily the front door of the Bartoe place. In size, but in no other way, he resembled Selwood. Near the door two men demanded his business, denied him entrance, and when he staggered toward the door itself, insisting he would have a drink, one of the guards, seizing him by the throat, threw him with brutal indifference backward into the street, where he fell prone and lay muttering to himself.

Presently he began to sing somewhat uncertainly a teamster's song. But the more he sang, the better, apparently, he liked the idea, for the longer he sang, the louder he sang, much to the annoyance of the truculent guard, who finally strode toward him with a curse to silence him—failing in his eagerness to note that the drunken man now lay much farther out in the street than he had been thrown. In the darkness he reached the object of his wrath, lying prone, and tried to kick it into silence. Beyond that point of the action, he had, afterward, for some time but the haziest recollection. His foot was caught in the air, he was snapped violently backward, and before he could utter even a warning cry, his head struck the ground like a stone. Two minutes afterward, still unconscious, he lay gagged and bound, stripped of his two guns and hat and coat, and rolled to one side into the ashes.

The guard at the door had fared in the brief interval rather worse than better. Pardaloe timed his action to the thud he heard when the singing stopped; slinking up from behind like a mountain lion, he clapped one big hand over the second man's mouth, and with his other hand caught his victim's wrist in a vise; the next moment he had doubled him up in a bear hug and choked him into complete silence.

When the men were secured, Pardaloe dragged his prisoner, bound, around the corner of the building, arrayed himself, as far as he could get into them, in the accoutrements of his victim. Selwood, his face smeared with ashes, ran up. Not losing a moment, he whistled into the night for Bull Page, who, across the street, was awaiting his signal. "Now, Bull," he murmured, as the old man hastened to him, "for a look at the inside!"

Bull caught hold of the iron latch-handle and pulled at the door. It resisted. Either bolted or barred on the inside, his efforts made no impression on it.

"Stand aside, Bull," said Selwood. He tried the latch, in turn, and, using more force when less failed, jerked at the door violently; still unsuccessful, he pounded on it with his fist.

A watchman within unbarred and opened the door a few cautious inches. Selwood, under the hat of the fallen guard, thrust forward his head. "It's Bull Page. Let him in! He's got a message for Starbuck."

The watchman took no chances. "Hold on," he exclaimed gruffly, and at once slammed the door shut and barred it. While Selwood waited his return—with perhaps more impatience than Bull, who must have felt that to oblige a friend he was taking a good chance of getting shot—the watchman took counsel. He opened the door again presently and with the same caution. "Come in, Bull."

Selwood in the interval had thrown away the guard's hat and put on the extra cap pulled from one of his numerous pockets; and when the watchman opened the door wide enough for Bull to enter, he attempted to walk in behind him. The vigilant guardian pushed him out again. "No, you don't—"

"Keep out!" exclaimed the watchman, shoving Selwood roughly back as he tried to edge through the half-open door.

"But he's got news Starbuck wants," persisted Bull, to whom the thought of entering the wolves' den alone was much more repugnant than that of making an appearance under the wing of a man who could at least shoot if shot at.

"No, you don't," persisted the doorkeeper with a truculent aspect. "You come in, Bull Page—nobody else." With that, he jerked Bull in by the coat collar, and banged the door in Selwood's face.

The gambler took the rebuff impassively. Bull had his instructions: he was to tell Starbuck Selwood wanted to see him at the barn—and was likely to get rough handling for his pains. Outside the evil joint, Selwood felt he held at least one portal and could afford to wait.

But he was beginning to count Bull's effort a failure and was trying to devise a new scheme when, after what seemed a long interval, the door was opened again. Selwood, as he saw Harry Barbanet coming out, followed by Bull Page, slunk into the shadow. Barbanet, sober, alert, suspicious, was the one man in the place that Selwood had most hoped not to encounter, for none, he felt, of the wolves within would so quickly penetrate his rude disguise. As the two men emerged, he retreated.

Bull looked vacantly around in the darkness as if to get his bearings. "He's here," declared Page in his trembling voice, trying as he spoke to penetrate the shadows. "I know that much; or was a minute ago—he'll help, if I c'n find him."

"You won't need any help," insisted the busy bartender, scornfully. "They're all locked up together right inside here, back of the barber shop. Get old Fyler out the back door, tell him you'll help 'em get away, him first. He'll go out with you because he knows you—all you've got to do is, throw him into the river, Starbuck wants to get rid of him—you'll get paid."

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I.—Garth Guthrie, Canadian war veteran, having to live in the open on account of weakened lungs, is factor of a Hudson's Bay post at Elkwan. He came back from the conflict with a permanently scarred face, which he realizes cost him the love of his fiancee, Edith Falconer. Sir Charles Guthrie, his brother, is a millionaire war profiteer.

CHAPTER II.—With Etienne Savanne, halfbreed, his firm friend, Garth meets Doctor Quarrier, geologist, and his sister Joan. Their schooner has drifted ashore. Quarrier complains he has been robbed by a man known as "Laughing McDonald" or to the Indians as "McDonald Ha! Ha!" because of a scar which gives him a perpetual grin. McDonald is Garth's competitor for the fur trade. At Elkwan an Indian girl, Ninda, tuberculosis victim, whom Garth has befriended, is dying. Quarrier hints that Ninda is Garth's mistress, which is hotly resented. Joan, trained war nurse, cares for Ninda, but the girl dies.

CHAPTER III.—Garth tells Joan part of the reasons for his presence at Elkwan. He takes the Quarriers to Albany, from whence they can proceed to Montreal. Charles Guthrie writes reproaching his brother for not coming home. Charles' wife assures him Ethel still loves him, but Garth in his heart knows better. His scarred face has separated them.

CHAPTER IV.—Three of McDonald's party visit Elkwan seeking to buy gun shells. From them Garth learns of evil talk among the Indians concerning him and Ninda, and realizes Quarrier will spread his version of the affair.

CHAPTER V.—With Etienne's help Garth wins the friendship of Saul Souci, "medicine man" and treaty chief of the Crees, and gets his promise to persuade the Crees to take their furs to Elkwan instead of to McDonald. Garth is ambushed by Joe Mokoman, Ninda's reputed father, whom the factor had driven from Elkwan. "Shot," Garth's airedale companion on many battlefields in France, saves him, and the Indian is taken, a prisoner, to Elkwan.

CHAPTER VI.—Garth sends Mokoman to McDonald with a message of defiance, and the war is on.

Into the night, the two discussed the plan of the old Indian to undermine the operations of McDonald Ha! Ha! against the fox pelts of Akimiski. But when he sought his bed, the thoughts of Garth Guthrie were of the short, swift days when a girl with dark, straight-gazing eyes and a mass of unruly hair whose errant tendrils defied restraint, had noiselessly taken charge of the house and the stricken Ninda—who had, with such delicacy, eased the sting of the tragedy which followed his homecoming.

To the girl who, in her blond loveliness, smiled from his dresser, in the dim candle light, Garth vouchsafed the acknowledgment of a doubtful shake of the head. "The sister-in-law of the great Sir Charles Guthrie," he quoted from Clara's letter. "No, you haven't changed, my dear. You're the same old Ethel." And he blew out the candle. But before he slept, he told himself that whatever Christmas might bring in the way of ill luck to Elkwan, it would be compensated for by the arrival of the mail team from Albany with Joan Quarrier's promised letter.

* * * * * * * *

Frozen in under the lee of the timberless hills circling the cove, the schooner of Laughing McDonald lay sheathed with ice and snow, snugly wedged in her winter berth, her bare poles and stack, from the galley, alone marking her in the litter of broken ice.

In the cramped area of the little cabin, piled with boxes, sat three men: Skene, the middle-aged Newfoundland mate, with the short leg; Breault, the master, big, black-bearded, beefy, with small, hard eyes, which shifted overmuch as he talked; and on a strongly made wooden box with a heavily stenciled end, was doubled the third. Although hunched on the box of ammunition, his long arms clasping his knees, the lean bulk and length of the man were manifest. From the sleeves of his arctic overshirt, wrists and hands, eloquent of the bone and thews muffled in the thick clothes, protruded. Anywhere between Whale river on the east coast and Elkwan, the face of this man would have furnished his identification. Below rebellious russet hair and cold blue eyes, the devastation left by a shell fragment had baffled the art of the plastic surgeons. The patched semblance of a mouth, twisted with its gashed cheek into an endless leer, like a gargolye on a gothic tower, stamped the face of Laughing McDonald with an aspect fiendish, diabolical. Young, with the body of a Viking, this man with eyes blue as the bergs which sweep its coast had returned to Canada from the war, wearing for features a comic mask, which, according to their kind, shifted the eyes of the beholders in pity, or drew the stealthy snigger of derision. But most, who for the first time looked upon the great-shouldered giant with the ice-blue eyes and mangled mouth, turned to marvel what a man for the eye must have been he who was now "Laughing McDonald."

"So you saw Joe Mokoman, did you, Skene?" The bass of McDonald broke the silence with an odd, slurring articulation, due to the misshapen lips.

"Yes. He says he's covered most of the camps at this end of the island. Of course, the blizzard held him up."

"And they'll come in with their fur, Christmas week?"

"Most of 'em will, he thinks." The older man wrinkled his bushy brows as he filled his pipe. "These two half-breeds from Revillon Freres, in that shack beyond Big point, have been after them hard, you know. They've given 'em the same talk the Hudson's Bay handed 'em—about our poor stuff, and cheatin'."

"By gar!" burst out Breault. "I run dese people off de island, toute suite. Where is dere camp?"

"You would, would you?" drawled McDonald. "You don't seem to reallize that we're anchored here in this ice until May. Do you want the French and the Hudson's Bay to notify Ottawa that a gang of pirates are running amuck on the bay? We can't fight the government, you know. We're here to take out the fur catch of Akimiski, not to lose the schooner, the fur, and stand trial in the bargain, for God knows what."

Breault's face darkened behind his black beard as he muttered in feeble protest, his small eyes shifting from his chief to Skene for support of his suggestion.

The sober Skene shook his head. "No! If you manhandled those French company men, we'd be in a nasty mess, tied up here with two years' trade of fur. A snug nest egg for each of us for the government to confiscate. You're crazy, Breault."

"Now what did he learn of the whereabouts of this treaty chief, Souci, whom Guthrie landed with him?"

"Joe says he headed for the north end of the island to find his sons. He hasn't been seen since."

"Well, you can bet he's out to beat us if he can, but how can he keep those hunters away from us this Christmas if the strait is open? The Indians say it seldom closes until January."

"He can't," agreed Skene. "They'll never wait till then to cross the ice to Elkwan when they know we'll pay more for the fur right here, within easy reach. They always have a blow-out New Year's, and they'll come here to have it. We'll give 'em a good one. We can afford to."

"Right-o!" McDonald nodded, then added: "Your hunch on this Elkwan man seems to be borne out by his bucking the ice in that York boat. Only a man with guts would tackle that strait in a tub."

"There ain't no doubt about his color," said Skene with finality, exhaling a cloud of smoke. "He's due to give us a fight, as he wrote you—just how I don't see, but I've seen enough fightin' men in the last five years to know the look of 'em—. He's one."

"He mus' scare you, my fr'en', leetle bit, w'en you meet heem on de beach," bantered Breault.

The heavy brows of Skene lifted in a look, close to contempt, which he cast at the speaker. "Breault, I've been in places that would have turned that black hair of yours gray. Scare me? This Elkwan man was civil, and I was civil. I was after some shells. But don't forget the message he sent you. He said if that black Frenchman ever showed up at his place again, he'd get a knife stuck into him. And I'm betting he told the truth—from the ugly look of a half-breed he had with him. When the strait freezes, why don't you go and find out?"

"Yes," added McDonald. "Get this straight in your thick head. You keep away from the squaws this winter, here. We're after fur—not women."

In scarlet patches blood smeared the maimed face of the man on the box. The deep blue of his eyes blackened—then flamed. Slowly, he straightened his long body until his russet head touched the deck above. A huge fist trembled in the bearded face of the man whose small eyes shifted in secret fear. "You drop another word like that to me, you slacker, and I'll hammer you into jelly."

The master of the Ghost swallowed hard—choked. His eyes wavered—then fell before the flaming mask, grotesque, terrible in its fury, of the man who bent toward him. The moving hand of Breault stopped—limp.

Slowly McDonald regained his seat, the sweat standing in beads on his wide, bronzed forehead. Refilling his pipe, he lighted it and, ignoring the rebuked Breault, turned to Skene.

"Where were we? Oh, yes! Now, when does Joe start for the other end of the island? I'm curious to learn what that old Souci is up to."

"Now that he's got a dog-team, he intends to start—"

The voices of men on deck, evidently hailing some one on the ice, cut off Skene.

McDonald called, "what's the fuss about on deck?"

"Dog-team on the ice," came the reply.

The three men got into Eskimo parkas and went on deck. Halfway from the shore a dog-team was making its way over the lumpy ice of the cove.

"Who is it? Recognize him?" asked Skene of the east coast Cree interpreter, who was wintering on the Ghost. "It's not Joe?"

The Indian shook his head.

Presently the hooded driver of the approaching huskies called: "Kequay!" and shortly reached the rail of the schooner, watched by the curious knot of men on deck.

Making his dogs fast, the stranger clambered aboard, and with a grave "Kequay," shook the hand of each of the group—then spoke in Cree to the interpreter.

"Who is he?" asked McDonald "He's got a cut to his jib that's different from most of these Crees. Shrewd looking old party."

"He says he's Souci, Treaty Chief of the Elkwan Crees," replied the interpreter. "He cum to mak' talk wit McDonald Ha! Ha!"

Skene and McDonald exchanged surprised looks.

"What's this?" said the latter in an undertone. "Why, it's the bird Guthrie put ashore with Joe to work against us."

"Here's our chance to put one over on Mr. Hudson's Bay," chuckled Skene. "He must have a proposition to make, or he would have kept away from us. He's got nerve, I'll say. Joe told me he'd shoot him if he met him on the island."

Shortly the old Indian, the fur hood of his caribou capote pushed back from a shock of raven hair, sat in the warm cabin with McDonald and Skene. His story, told through the interpreter, for he said he spoke no English, was brief. Yes, as they had been told, he was Treaty Chief of the Elkwan Crees, and had been sent by Guthrie to attempt to hold the trade until the strait closed. But the Hudson's Bay company had a cold heart. It always had given the hunters little for their fur, and now when others came to trade, and threatened to take the fur from the old company, its heart was still cold, and it offered less than the new traders. He, Souci, a chief, had been promised reward if he saved part of the trade and brought it to Elkwan; but what reward? It was the pay of a squaw. "His two sons already had three black fox pelts and eight silvers—worth double what the factor at Elkwan had promised for his winter's work. Now, he had great influence with the Cree hunters—was a shaman, and many of them would wait until the strait closed and go to Elkwan. What would McDonald Ha! Ha! offer for the services of Souci, Chief of the Elkwan Crees, to bring the northern hunters to the schooner at Christmas?"

"Well! I'll say he's a cool one," laughed McDonald. "He comes right inside our wire to our trenches and wants to bargain. The Hudson's Bay probably haven't offered him much. But he's trying to sell us what we'll get anyway."

"What's his price?" demanded Skene.

The interpreter talked rapidly with Souci, then replied with a grin: "He say he wan' t'ree rifle, t'ree goose-gun, and trade-good' for ten prime black fox. Hees own fur he trade, al-so."

"Ten black fox—two thousand dollars in trade-goods? Nonsense!" McDonald scowled fiercely into the bony face of the old shaman with its leather-like skin, mapped with lines. The heady eyes of Souci, unwavering, gave look for look. For a space the cold blue eyes probed the black inscrutability of the Cree's stare. Slowly the caliber of Saul Souci rose in appraisal of the white man. Here was an Indian of parts—nerve, brains, power. As a medicine man, of use, if his service were needed. But his price was ridiculous—his help not necessary. They had Joe Mokoman. It was enough.

"Suppose, by chance, the strait should close this year?" threw out Skene.

"It never has, so early." McDonald thought a space, then turned to the interpreter. "Offer him the guns and the value of five black fox."

The face of old Souci darkened as the interpreter communicated the offer. He shook his head in anger.

"Well, that's our limit," said McDonald, rising. "Tell him we don't need him, but we'll pay him a good price for his fur if he'll bring it in at once."

Silent in his disappointment, Souci went on deck, followed by the others. Freeing his impatient dogs, the old chief turned to the men watching from the rail and said quietly in English: "Bo'-jo'! Tomorrow I tak' de fox to Elkwan."

"Goin' to fly or swim?" laughed Skene, joined loudly by the group on deck.

The lean face of the dog-driver framed in its fur hood was wooden in its placidity, as he coolly said: "De strait freeze hard two sleeps back!" And cracking his long whip, he leaped on the tail of his toboggan and was off.

"What! The strait is closed?" gasped McDonald, seizing Skene by the shoulder. "Frozen solid, he said! Hallo, there, Souci!" cried the excited trader to the fast-traveling dog-team. "You, Pierre! Get after him and bring him back. Tell him we'll give him his price. Strait frozen! H—l, Skene! Now we've got to fight for that fur!"

Skene was over the rail with the shrieking interpreter and running toward the sled, which had come to a stop. Slowly the old man turned his dogs toward the schooner.

"The clever beggar!" exclaimed McDonald in admiration. "Played us like a salmon. Waited to spring his trump card, and got his own price without a haggle! Knew he was shrewd—nervy! Speaks English, too! The old wizard! He's the chap we need now. Our little job is to stop a stampede across that ice for the Christmas feast that Guthrie has promised the Crees at Elkwan."

Skene swung over the rail and announced to his chief: "Souci says he'll start north at once and agrees to hold his relations and most of the rest, on the terms he offered. He wants to bind the bargain with you, personally."

"Good!" And McDonald vaulted over the schooner's rail, followed by Skene and Breault.

"The strait was closed two sleeps back? Where?" he demanded of the Indian.

"Ovair de shoal at Beeg point."

"You saw it?"

"I cross to de Elkwan."

"What? You've crossed the ice to the post?"

The Indian nodded, his stone-hard features an enigma to the men who sought to read them.

"What did you learn?"

"Dis Guthrie know de ice set, and all de Cree cum to Elkwan. He say he geve me not'ing to work for heem."

Saul Souci grinned into the gaping faces surrounding him. "Onlee Saul Souci get you all dat fox from de nord, now."

McDonald thrust out a red, mitless hand. "It's a bargain! You bring that trade here and you get three rifles, three shotguns, and the value of ten prime black fox in trade."

Dropping his rabbit-skin mitten on its neck thong, Souci took the extended hand of the trader. "Klyam appowiya, it ees good," he said, solemnly. Thrusting his hand into the hanging mitten, he cracked the whip of plaited caribou thongs over his lead dog's ears, and again started for the shore, leaving behind him on the ice an arguing group of mystified and excited men.

CHAPTER VII

The morning subsequent to the nights of withering frost which clinched the grip of the ice on the west coast, Garth and Etienne, muffled in blanket capotes and fur robes, drove their five-dog team, hitched to a runner sled for ice-work, out of the closed delta of the Elkwan and down the coast. Inland, the wide marshes reached the ripples of drift, like a white sea, to the outguards of the space, or lay, parti-colored, patches of dead grass brushed of snow, splashing the white levels with ochre and dun. Splitting the frozen shell of the strait broken by pressure ridges and heaps of shattered ice, a streak of black to the east marked the still open channel. Beyond, the hidden sun, breaking from the bay, rimmed the barrens of Akimiski with fire.

But it was to the south, where the great point of the island pushed its bulk into the strait that Garth hoped to find that the abnormal December cold had built a bridge of ice to Akimiski. Over the easy going of wind-hammered snow and shore ice, the dogs romped past the frozen beaches. At a sandspit strewn with boulders Garth stopped. With a hand from Etienne, he reached the top of a large rock and taking his binoculars from their case, studied the miles of ice-sheathed shoals which followed the thrust of Big point toward the mainland. As he looked, his lips moved in a muttered note of surprise. Could it be that luck had come to Elkwan—to Garth Guthrie, in the shape of a road of ice from Akimiski before Christmas?

"Come up here, quick!" he called to the man at the sled. The half-breed scrambled to the top of the boulder. "I can't make out open water over there," said Garth, exultantly. "You take a look. It was a mile wide the day before the blow."

Dropping his mittens, Etienne took the proffered glasses. Until his hands reddened with cold, he stood as if hewn from the boulder. Then, when the column of his frosted breath misted the lenses, he handed the glasses to Garth, his eyes snapping with excitement. "De ice set ovair dem bar; we cross today and hunt old Souci!" he cried, sliding from the boulder and running to the impatient dogs.

"We'll take rations for a week," said Guthrie, "round up the Elkwan hunters Saul is sure of, and chase them over the ice. McDonald may not know for days that the strait is closed here. He's thirty miles away."

The willing huskies, urged by the crack of Etienne's whip, took the back trail to the post on the run. The success of the undertaking hung largely on speed, and while Marie loudly bewailed the rashness of the crossing, seconded by the vehement protests of old Anne, tent, robes and provisions were hurriedly stowed and lashed.

When Anne opened the gate, with a leap Shot reached Guthrie, busy with a sled lashing, and man and dog rolled in the snow. Shielding his face with a mittened hand from the attacks of a hot tongue, Garth finally calmed the delirious dog, while Etienne checked the yelping huskies, keen to punish such familiarity with the factor of Elkwan.

South of the Big Point shoals, the great Attawapiskat, carrying the drainage of a vast hinterland, debouched through two mouths, a wide delta, and, eight miles to the south, a single channel, the Lowaski. Snug in his tight little post above the delta of the upper mouth of the river, Graham, the factor, independent of the fox skins of Akimiski, waited for the rich trade from the interior to come to him. But some of the hunters trading at the post always wintered on the island and before he crossed in search of Saul, Guthrie wished to get the latest news from Albany and arrange for the dispatch of a dog-team, informing his chief of his crossing to the island. How far the crew of the schooner were prepared to go in the struggle for the trade, he had no means of knowing, but of their energy and daring there was no doubt. If Souci were successful and the free-traders attempted to interfere with the hunters crossing to Elkwan, there might be an ugly row. So the fast dog-team doubled back down the coast ice and before noon drew in to the high shore at Attawapiskat.

Graham looked up in surprise to see the tall figure of his neighbor to the north walk into the trade-room. Graham was old and waiting only for his service pension. His days with the dogs on the shore ice or inland over the white barriers were over. If McDonald were wintering on the island there would be little Akimiski fox traded at a Hudson's Bay post that year. Of that he was sure. He couldn't see how crossing to the island after the strait closed would help the matter. The schooner would get the Christmas trade and pick up the fur through the winter as it was trapped. It was hard on Elkwan, but he had his upriver trade. McDonald couldn't touch that. Thus Graham, who lacked but two years of retirement, and loved the comfort of his snug quarters.

"Well, what brings you here in thirty-below weather?" he replied to Guthrie's salutation. "I've been hugging a fire for a week, trying to thaw out."

Guthrie laughed. "I'm on my way to the island, Graham. I want you to relay this letter to Cameron—"

"The island!" Graham gasped in surprise. "How—you mean the strait's closed—set over the shoals?"

"Yes!" And Guthrie hastily outlined the situation on Akimiski and his plans.

"You think Souci will control the Elkwan hunters? Why should they cross the ice to you when McDonald will pay more for their pelts?"

Guthrie's face reflected his irritation. "Graham, I'm employed to get fur—not smoke by the stove and wait for it to come in. As Cameron expects this letter and Christmas is only ten days away, I'll thank you to start a team with it at once."

The victim of Guthrie's sarcasm reddened under the ruthless characterization of his sedentary tendencies, but his pension was near, and the risk of a dash over the young ice was Guthrie's, not his, so he magnanimously overlooked the thrust.

"I'll send a team, yes, if that's Cameron's orders. I'll say you're a fool, though, to cross. A good wind will break up that new ice and cut you off. It's never in my memory closed before January. Still, it's your job, not mine. Go ahead and get yourself drowned, if you want to."

"Some of your people winter there?"

"Oh, yes! Six or eight families. But I can't help that."

"No, you can't," agreed Guthrie, catching Etienne's furtive look. "Well, we'll have just about light enough to cross in, so I'll start."

As the dogs hurried over the wind-brushed shell of the strait, broken by drifts and hummocks, split by tide cracks, irregular with crushed ice masses lifted into pressure ridges, the eyes of the men on the light sled were focused far out on what, the week before, had been impassable black water. Eight miles out, half way across, its drift ice, thrall to tide and wind, had threatened with swift ruin the eggshell of a canoe, which challenged its barrier. But now, over the shoals, the channel had been sealed. As the dog-team reached the newly frozen gap, Etienne and Guthrie went ahead to test the ice with axes. In defiance of the tide, the fierce frost had set three-inch ice. Anxiously the men swept the width of the channel with glasses. There were no breaks. So, led by the scampering airedale and Guthrie, with Etienne driving the huskies from the tail of the sled, they took the crossing on the run.

A half-mile out when fear of thin ice had left him and he swung along with Shot in front, Garth suddenly felt the ice vibrate beneath his moccasins. The sled with the dogs would go through, unless they came with a rush. Turning as he ran, he waved to Etienne—their agreed-upon signal for speed.

"Marche! mes enfants!" The long caribou thong cracked on the lead dog's ears. With a surprised yelp Castor, spreading his feet, came with the team at a wild gallop. On they rushed, straining, slipping huskies, nails scratching the ice for footing, and swinging toboggan, urged on by Etienne, for a break through meant swift drowning for the dogs from the drag of the sled, and freezing in the stinging wind for the driver, if he reached firm ice.

A hundred yards of mad scramble and the second dog slipped, slid sideways, jerking the leader off his feet. The sled swung in a wide skid. Passing his thrashing huskies on the run, Etienne called them to follow. Before the sled stopped its swing, the dogs were up and hard on their master's heels. A hundred yards and they reached the heavier ice—minutes of suspense, and the lead was crossed.

The two friends gripped hands beside the panting dogs.

"Did you feel it?" cried Guthrie. "Thought I was going through! Felt like running on stretched canvas!"

"I saw it geeve undair you, and crack de wheep before you turn. We go t'ro' een dat channel, and pouf! we nevaire care eef McDonald Ha! Ha! get de fur or not, eh?"

* * * * * * * *

Somewhere north of Big point in a valley sheltered by the tundra from the winds off the ice fields, the sons of old Souci had a base camp. But the Indian had given Garth no rendezvous in case he managed to cross the strait before Christmas, for Souci carried a roving commission, and his work lay where he found the Elkwan hunters. To Garth the island was unknown country, but Etienne had trapped there and they started up the shore ice, bound for the mouth of the Ptarmigan, a river which headed deep in the interior, confident of learning Souci's whereabouts from the first Indian they met. For news of the coming of the old chief to the island would be passed swiftly from hunter to hunter, valley to valley. And now the closing of the strait had greatly enhanced the value and importance of Souci's embassy to the Crees. Those loyal to the old company could cross for the New Year's feast at the post, bringing their pelts; those wavering in the direction of the trade goods of McDonald could not now meet Saul's appeals with the objection that a barrier of open water, running with floe, would crush their canoes. But the longer he dwelt on the attractions of the schooner at the cove, the less confident he grew of saving much of the fox trade. Few of the fickle Crees would resist the blandishments of the free-trader's agents. Then with a start he realized that he was ignoring the scheme the old chief had outlined to Etienne, and wondered if the magic was working—if the mad medicine of the sorcerer had conjured a tabu against the schooner. In the valley of the Ptarmigan they would find a camp and learn.

As the huskies trotted smartly up the coast of the island while Shot, free lance, ranged widely along shore in search of adventure, Guthrie's thoughts temporarily deserted his mission on Akimiski to dwell—now that he had seemingly burned his bridges—on his status at home. For it would not be foreign to his brother's egotism and reverence for the conventions to read Garth out of the family, since he had written refusing to return. The gossip, following his failure to join the staff of the Guthrie Steel company and lead Ethel Falconer in all her blond loveliness to the altar, would be gall to the palate of the recently knighted head of the Guthries. The neglect of his express command to the exile to shake the mud of James bay from his sealskin boots and assume the responsibilities of a family man and a man of family would, in all likelihood, mean that on his return to Montreal there would be no position in the works—no brother's house open—to the rebel. His personal means, inherited from his father, were modest. Charles' fortune was the result of his own efforts—and a fortuitous war. That was why Charles demanded wholesome respect and absolute obedience from his younger brother. At the thought the younger brother smiled in his fur hood, ringed with rime from his frozen breath. From the man who had led his platoon at the Somme and his battalion in front of Amiens, the dignity and swiftly made fortune of Charles commanded no deference and little respect. On his return—his return? He had committed himself to making good at Elkwan for his employers—for his own self-respect. What he had started he would see through. There might be no return—unless a certain letter in the Christmas mail should—. Then his thought, until the dogs swung off the sea-ice and into the broken going at the mouth of the Ptarmigan, were of three swift days at Elkwan and two on the coast—of eyes, abstracted, perplexed, at times wistful, and a dark head silvered with moonlight, on the high shore above the Albany.

VOL. 8 — BELMOND, IOWA. THURSDAY, JULY 14, 1927 — NO. 35

ANNUAL HOME COMING AND LEGION DAY COMBINED CELEBRATION HERE JULY 28

Full Day's Program Is Being Arranged

Two Annual Affairs Will Be Held Together On Last Thursday in July

HOMECOMING IN EVENING

Thursday, July 28, is the date for the biggest celebration Belmond has had for some years. On that date, the Annual Homecoming Day and the American Legion celebration will be combined into a day crammed full with a variety of entertainment and good time.

The Legion Celebration will be entirely separate from the Homecoming program, and arrangements are being made so that it will not conflict with the Community club's annual observance. The Legion entertainment will be given in the morning and afternoon, and the evening devoted practically entirely to the Homecoming, as has always been done heretofore.

While the program for the big day has not been completed as yet, arrangements are being made for a variety of entertainment, including a good base ball game, street sports, band concerts, concessions, rides balloons for the kiddies, dancing morning and afternoon, free acts and possibly an address by some well known speaker.

The evening program for the Homecoming has not been worked out as yet, but it is planned to have a number of old time musical numbers, addresses by some of the former Belmond residents, band selections, picnic supper, and special program.

Complete details of the two programs will be available next week. The Legion program of events will be held on Main Street, and at the base ball field, while the Homecoming celebration will be as usual in the city park.

U. S. CAVALRY COMING

Troop F, 14th U. S. Cavalry, of Fort Des Moines, Iowa, commanded by Capt John E. Mober, will arrive in Belmond, tomorrow, Friday, on the way to Fort Snelling, Minnesota, for the Citizens Training Camp.

The Troop consists of three officers, 50 men and about 60 horses, together with equipment. They will arrive here about noon tomorrow, camping over night and leaving next morning. Mayor Russell has made arrangements for camping grounds in the Griesy pasture, just south of the M. & St. L. tracks near the Pat Dillon residence on River Avenue South. This is the ground usually used by troops passing through.

This outfit are the same as camped in Belmond last year, and Capt. Mober in his letter to Mayor Russell, made particular note of the courteous treatment afforded the men last year as one reason for choosing this route for this summer's hike. Citizens who desire to visit the camp will be permitted to do so, and will be afforded every opportunity to inspect Uncle Sam's "Regulars." Belmond has attained a reputation among the boys as being a "regular" town with friendly folks; give the troop tomorrow the same friendly welcome.

LUNCHEON CLUB TODAY

Regular meeting of the Business Men's Luncheon Club will be held today at the hotel.

Mr. and Mrs. Rudolph C. Johnson, son and daughter, from Aplington, were guests at the Henry Groen home, Monday. Henry worked for Mr. Johnson 42 years ago, at Aplington and the two men had a very enjoyable visit.

Rev. B. Guldseth motored to Forest City, Tuesday, where he attended the annual meeting of the Waldorf College association.

COURT HOUSE NOTES

Considerable interest in this county attached to the ruling of Attorney General Fletcher last week on the tax ferret proposition. Tax ferrets are entitled to a salary or per diem but not a commission on the taxes they collect, according to the attorney general. Boards of supervisors may properly engage ferrets, he ruled, but any sums paid them for their service must come from the county fund, rather than from the tax monies collected.

While the Wright county contract with the tax collectors recently engaged by the board complies with the above ruling, it is so worded that up to the present time the ferrets have had little trouble in collecing practically twenty-five per cent from the county for their work.

Following is the schedule of wages authorized by the board:

Miss Pfeifer, per day	15.00
Her first assistant	10.00
All others	7.50

Overtime at same rates.

Compensation of all employes shall not exceed 25 per cent of the amount collected.

Considerable dissatisfaction is heard over the wages paid these collectors. Allowing thirty days for a month it will be seen good fat salaries are being paid in each case. The lady in charge receives more than any officer in the court house and her assistants from twice to three times as much as the deputy county officers. For instance the 17 year old lad employs a good share of his time carrying records from the several offices to the collector's office and going to the post-office for the mail. For this service he is paid $7.50 per day.

The collections so far reported and wages paid for the same are as follows:

Tax	25 Percent
April—$1,714.94	$428.73
Paid ferrets	428.11
May—$6,068.47	$1,517.11
Paid ferrets	1,516.91
June—$2,991.49	$747.87
Paid ferrets	724.37

In certain quarters it is denied that the board is paying the collectors twenty-five per cent for their work. That is true, they are not, but a little figuring will show just how close the ferrets get in under the wire. For the month of April the collectors were allowed within 62c of 25 per cent of the amount collected. For May they fell short only 20c. For June the amount was $23.50 less than the per cent mentioned above.

L. A. Andrew, receiver for Citizens State Bank of Eagle Grove, has filed suit against George and Stella Atwood to collect on their promissory note the sum of $5522.39.

Judge T. G. Garfield of Ames convened a summer session of the district court Tuesday. Probate matters occupied the major portion of the time.

Joe Valley, formerly of Clarion, was given a five year sentence last week in the penitentiary at Fort Madison at Nevada by Judge Garfield. He had previously entered a plea of guilty to the charge of grand larcency. Valley and his brother-in-law were implicated in the theft of a number of hogs from a Story County farmer.

Prosecution on a charge of failing to properly candle eggs that was carried on in justice court last week was handled in the name of Harry Moore, whereas, it should have been Harry Moore Co., with Earl M. Anderson appearing as manager of the Goldfield store under that name. Information was filed under the name of the individual and went through court proceedings in that manner. Mr. Moore has been deceased for seven years, and all business is now carried in the name of the company which continues the business which he formerly owned.—Monitor.

Maude Aldrich, of Rowan, was a guest at the F. C. Aldrich home, last week.

Young Farmer Loses One Eye

Clarence Scott In Hospital After Wire Pierces Eye

Clarence Scott, a prosperous young farmer near Olaf, lost the sight of his right eye, Monday, when it was pierced by a piece of wire.

Mr. Scott was using a piece of wire to fasten a corn sheller to the back of his autombile, at a neighbors, intending to haul the sheller to his home. The wire flew up, striking him in the eye. He was taken to Dr. Steele, in Belmond, who immediately sent him to Dr. O'Brien, a specialist at Mason City.

Dr. O'Brien removed a cataract which had been formed but said that the sight had been destroyed. Clarence was removed to the Mercy hospital, where an operation will probably be performed in the hopes of saving the eye ball.

Hazel Arends and Rena Groen went to Mason City, Monday, where they will be employed, in a restaurant.

Indianola Couple In Wreck Here

Fail To Make Turn North Of Belmond; Car Turns Over

Mr. and Mrs. Wesley Barnes, of Indianola, suffered various injuries when their Chevrolet coupe went off the grade at the corner west of the Wilbur bridge, north of Belmond, on Primary 15, Tuesday morning. Mrs. Barnes received a fractured collar bone and numerous cuts and bruises. Mr. Barnes was cut about the face and head. A young girl, a neighbor of the Barnes family at Indianola, who was also in the car, received several cuts.

The party, in three cars, were coming south on 15, enroute home from a trip to Wisconsin. They were traveling too fast to make the turn and the Barnes car went off the road into the ditch, turning completely over and alighting bottom side up.

C. M. Morse, on his way to Goodell, saw the cars coming, and witnessed the crash. He immediately took the injured to the local hospital. After receiving attention to their injuries, the party proceeded home to Indianola.

The car was practically demolished, the top being caved in, the radiator smashed and the body splintered.

FOUR BOYS PASS TEST IN LIFE SAVING

Four boys from this locality passed the tests in the Life Saving demonstrations held at Wilson's Point, Cornelia, last week, by Walter Wicks, national Red Cross representative. Richard Gowdy passed the senior test, and Verle Wilson, Hoyt Klemme and Max Elder the junior tests. The demonstrations given Wednesday and Thursday by Mr. Wicks were quite well attended, and much valuable information was imparted in life saving and first aid work. The Boy Scout and Girl Scout troops of Belmond both attended and received instruction and a number of adults were present.

SUGAR STOCKHOLDERS GET NOTICE OF PLANT SALE

Stockholders in the Iowa Valley Sugar Co. received the following letter regarding sale of the plant August 4 to satisfy the outstanding debts:

"In order that you may be informed in regard to the present status of the Iowa Valley Sugar Company, we are sending you this letter, outlining the present position of the company.

"As you were informed through a letter mailed you in February, 1927, the operations of the plant during the past two years have been at a decided loss, due to the average weather conditions and the very low price of sugar during these years.

"These losses left the company without funds with which to meet interest payments on the bonded indebtedness of the company and the trustees for these bond holders instituted foreclosure proceedings in the U. S. A. Federal Court at Fort Dodge, Iowa. At a hearing on June 15th, judgment was rendered, first to the Union Trust Company of Cleveland, trustee for the first mortgage bond holders and a junior judgment to the Central Trust Company of Illinois, trustee for the second mortgage bond holders. Special execution and sale of the property of the Iowa Valley Sugar Company to satisfy these claims were ordered by the court, to be conducted by the U. S. Marshal at his office in the Federal Building at Fort Dodge, Iowa, date of sale being set for 10:00 A. M. August 4, 1927. This sale is subject to the redemption rights as provided by the Code of Iowa, which gives the Sugar Company one year in which to redeem the property.

"Therefore, unless some plan is supported by the stockholders to bring about the redemption, the investment in the Iowa Valley Sugar Company will be a total loss and title to the property will go to the purchasers of the execution sale.

"Your officers and directors have put forth their best efforts to put the company in a position whereby your investment would be saved, but have been unable to overcome the adverse conditions that have existed in the industry during the time this company has been in existence."

Following the ceremony, the couple left for a short honeymoon trip by motor to Waterloo and Chicago. Upon their return they will make their home in Belmond.

Mrs. Swenson is a graduate of the Belmond high school and for the past year has been employed in Waterloo.

Mr. Swenson is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Z. Swenson, of Belmond, and for several years has been connected with the Belmond Storage Battery Co.

Belmond Girl Meets Death In Accident

Veronica McNamara Is Killed And Sister Seriously Hurt In Auto Crash, Sunday

WERE GOING TO OSAGE

Veronica McNamara, 24 years old, was instantly killed, and Anna McNamara, a sister, both of Belmond, seriously injured when the automobile in which they were riding went off the grade four miles west of Osage, Sunday afternoon, July 10th. John Palos, of Mason City, who was driving, received several broken ribs and severe cuts and bruises.

The party were on their way to Osage from Belmond, where the two young ladies had been visiting their mother, Mrs. P. C. Barry, and family. About four miles from Osage, Palos turned out to pass another car. The Palos car left the road and went over the grade, throwing the occupants out. Veronica was thrown about 15 feet, and was killed by injuries to her head and neck. Miss Anna received a broken arm, cuts and bruises, and serious internal injuries.

An Osage attorney, who was directly behind the party, took Miss Anna to the Osage hospital, where for a time it was feared her injuries would prove fatal. A call to the hospital yesterday gives the information that she is resting much easier and strong hopes are now held for her recovery. Her mother and stepfather are there with her.

The Palos car was completely demolished.

The remains of Veronica were brought to Belmond, Monday, and funeral services held Tuesday morning at 9:30 from St. Francis Catholic church, Rev. Patrick Molloy, pastor, in charge. Burial was in St. Francis cemetery.

WRIGHT COUNTY TESTING ASSOCIATION FOR JUNE

We are now starting the fourth year of testing in this county. It is surprising to note the improvement that has been made in the dairy herds that have taken part in this movement. In many cases the butterfat average has been doubled in two years. In every case, the man that stays with the association year after year, obtains the best results.

The 250 cows tested in June averaged 30 lbs. fat, or a pound fat a day. This is the highest average in the history of Wright County testing. It proves that the test is best.

This is the time of year that year around feeding tells its own story. Cows that get a well balanced ration during the entire year have their bodies built up to stand the excessive strain of the heat and flies. Even if every precaution is taken against flies the milk flow will drop now. However the cow that is well fed and taken care of will not decrease as much as the poorly fed cows. We are also keeping in mind the fact that there is a place in Chicago for the cow that is not profitable.

The five high herds over eight cows:

Eleven grade Holsteins, all in milk, owned by Harry Poundstone averaged 1209 pounds in milk and 38.3 pounds fat.

J. M. Sampson's herd of grade Guernseys, 13, all in milk, averaged 779 pounds milk and 36.1 pounds fat.

Homer Pardun's mixed herd of 8 cows, all in milk, averaged 880 pounds milk and 35.5 pounds fat.

A. O. and E. G. Hauge's herd of 16 purebred Holsteins, all in milk, averaged 959 pounds milk and 33.3 pounds fat.

H. N. Denby's mixed herd of 11, all in milk, averaged 864 pounds of milk and 32.7 pounds fat.

The association has splendid prospects for a good year, and we hope everyone may be successful.

Mrs. Victor Allen, who has been visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Groen, left Sunday for Denver, Colorado.

BELMOND PAPERS MERGE

Britt News-Tribune: The two Belmond newspapers have consolidated, the Independent taking over The Herald-Press, the older paper. This move is in keeping with the times. At Iowa Falls only recently the two weeklies consolidated. The heavy cost of producing the kind of a newspaper the public demands today is driving the weaklings out of business and many strong newspaper plants have seen the futility of laboring under the heavy costs incident to producing a paper and have consolidated. Note the consolidation of the two great Des Moines dailies a few months ago. The two Garner papers should work out some sort of a deal whereby they could be consolidated. Garner has no better trade territory than Britt and Belmond and even with one newspaper in these towns the business is none too good. Forest City and Algona are no better towns than Iowa Falls and it would seem the part of wisdom if the newspapers in those towns could be consolidated. The Algona papers are well supported and both are very well edited. From all appearances they are prosperous, largely because their merchants are good advertisers. Forest City has always been a poor advertising town. If they could reduce to one weekly and have a Tom Purcell to sell the merchants advertising until they are convinced of its worth the one weekly could do a prosperous business.

Now if the merchants of Belmond will use printers ink and advertise they will be able to help themselves and at the same time make it possible for the newspaper to improve. We have never met the publisher, R. A. Rankins, but we hope he finds the new venture profitable and lasting. The Ramsay boys are fine fellows. Wallace, who has had charge of the Herald-Press for several years, is postmaster at Belmond and his brother Walter is Secretary of State. The newspaper fraternity will miss Wallace and his weekly editorials but it is hoped the change of work will be to his liking and that when he is through with the post-office he may again enter the newspaper field somewhere in northern Iowa.

IT MUST BE FINE

Algona Republican:—It must be fine to be President of the United States and go on a vacation with everything furnished. When a poor dub of an editor goes on a fishing trip he first has to dig the worms, fix up a pole and line for all the other members of the family, find the place where the fishing is supposed to be good, get the tent up or baggage in some cottage that the last occupant forgot to clean when he left. Then he must rustle some firewood, fresh water and a few other things and by the time he has his chores all done he is ready for the bunk that he calls his bed and which is about as soft as any board side walk. Now the president doesn't have to do these things. Some other guy furnishes him a can of milk fed worms, leads him to a place where a lot of fish have been corralled, picks out a big juicy worm and places it on the hook and waits for results. The president has a nibble, a bite, and yanks out a nice fish. The other fellow takes it off the hook, baits it up again and places the fish on the stringer. When they get back to camp another guy cleans the fish, another guy fries it and another serves it at the president's table. O it must be great to be President!

HOUSES

And tell me, people of Orphalese, what have you in these houses? Have you peace, the quiet urge that reveals your power?

Have you remembrance, the glimmering arches that span the summits of the mind

Have you beauty, that leads the heart from things fashioned of wood and stone to the holy mountain?

Or have you only comfort, the lust for comfort—which murders the passion of the soul, and then walks grinning in the funeral?

—Kahlil Gibran, "The Phophet."

VACATION

Vacation is not what it says, a vacuity, but rather a change of occupations and interests, a different scene and a filling up with some thing else. To lie abed and rest is not nearly so peppifying as to do for vacation just the opposite to your day-by-day's work. But don't be so strenuous at it that you will come home all tired out.

Look out for the drinking water you use when away from home. Don't drink that whose purity is unknown. Typhoid might lurk in it.

Avoid the camp in a low place where mosquitos will eat you alive. Keep flies away from Baby's milk. Don't go in swimming for an hour and a half after eating.

Do you know the poison ivy vine, with its three divided leaf; the poison oak, a small shrub with broad leaves like an oak; and poison sumac which grows in swampy places? Learn to recognize and avoid them. If you get the poison ivy rash, followed by itching, swelling and small blisters, wash with salt water, or warm boric acid water—a teaspoon of boric acid powder to a quart of water—and apply the dry powder after washing.

Warned with a foreknowledge of what to avoid get out into the open for summer relaxation. There is nothing which will so loosen the strings of care as a meal or day in the outdoors. It fills your lungs with air, your body with vigor, and your mind with the holiday spirit.

One can pick up a jolly crowd in the twinkling of an eye. Take along a basket of several varieties of sandwiches, the thermos bottle or hot or cold drink, cake or cookies, and fruit, and paper plates, cups, spoons and napkins. You will need a big rubber ball or bean bag for play a jolly book or magazine, or a musical instrument. It's worth lingering 'til evening just to see the sun go down and dusk drop softly over the earth. The family picnic or vacation together promotes family fellowship.

COOL DRINKS

To show hospitality for the chance auto guest who passes your "house by the side of the road," keep simple cookies or cakes within easy reach and have the "makings" of a cooling drink in your refrigerator. Such desirable ingredients are: bottled fruit juices, ginger ale, lemons, and a sugar syrup made by boiling together equal quantities of sugar and water for ten minutes and bottling hot.

A cooling drink may be made as follows: mix equal quantities of pineapple juice, orange juice and grape juice. For each cup of fruit add one and a half cups water. Sweeten with sugar syrup. A lemon brings out the flavor of other fruits and is a delicious addition to any cooling drink.

ONE-PIECE MEAL

Just as much time-savers as the one piece dresses are one-piece meals, They are cooked all in one dish, a steamer or an aluminum pot and save dishwashing as well as gas. Dredge your swiss steak in flour, brown it well on both sides, add two cups of hot water to it. When it has simmered two hours, surround it with vegetables, such as potatoes, mangoes and carrots and let it simmer two more. Salt the dish when within half an hour of being done. Take up the meat on a platter and garnish with the vegetables. Make a thick gravy and pour over the meat.

"SAFETY FIRST" AT HOME

Science has so conquered disease that accidents now make up the leading cause of suffering and death. The accidents of industry and vehicles are great, but the home is not without its casualties.

The accidents in the home come about from slippery floors, poorly lighted steps, icy porches, soapy bathtubs, and shaky-ladders. Scalds and burns are also responsible for many accidents. Besides this, people have not learned that it is dangerous for the men folks to smoke in bed, for Mother to light the kitchen fire with gasline, for Baby to play with matches; or for anybody to leave poison about or to take a dose of medicine without reading the label.

AGRICULTURAL NEWS NOTES

AMERICAN POULTRY CONGRESS TO ENLARGE

The announcement that the Standard Bred Poultry Association will hold their annual fall state meeting in Waterloo, Sept. 26 to Oct. 2, in connection with the American Poultry Congress, Dairy Cattle Congress and Industrial Exposition, and that the Iowa Record Flock Association has also voted to hold their annual meeting in Waterloo during the time of the show indicates that the American Poultry Congress is becoming national in scope and being recognized all over the country as an institution for the development of the poultry industry. People in general are regarding the Poultry Congress as one of the outstanding educational exhibits and attractions which is growing year by year to keep abreast with the expansion of the other departments of the show.

The Iowa Association will exhibit more than 500 purebred birds, and it is expected that the Standard Bred Association will equal this entry record, which means that all previous records as to number of exhibitors of the better grades of poultry will be far exceeded.

BATTLE POTATO LEAF HOPPERS

When the edges of potato leaves begin to brown at this season, it is a good plan to examine the plants for a small green insect, known as the potato leaf hopper, and if this pest is present, the crop should be sprayed immediately with bordeaux mixture.

The leaf hopper may entirely kill the plants unless control measures are taken according to Fred D. Butcher, extension entomologist at Ames. The brown edges widen until finally the entire leaves and the stems are killed.

A 4-4-50 bordeaux spray (4 pounds copper sulfate, 4 pounds hydrated lime and 50 gallons water), applied with a sprayer that will develop 200 pounds pressure will control the insect. The nozzles of the sprayer should be set so that the spray will strike the under sides of the leaves for it is here that the eggs are laid and the young nymphs suck the plant juices. In small gardens where only a few potatoes are grown, a bordeaux mixture made with 1 tablespoon each of copper sulphate and hydrated lime to 3 1-2 quarts of water is equal in strength to the standard 4-4-50 mixture.

If the common Colorado potato beetle is present, this may be controlled by adding 2 1-2 pounds of lead arsenate or 1 1-2 pounds of Paris green to the 50 gallons of bordeaux.

In order completely to control the leaf hopper, two or three sprays may be needed, Mr. Butcher says.

WHAT KIND OF BORER IS IT?

From 10 to 30 letters daily have been coming to the entomologists at Iowa State College recently, inquiring about the common stalk borer, which attacks corn, oats, wheat, potatoes tomatoes and many other plants.

When this pest attacks grain, the heads turn white prematurely. Infested tomato and potato plants have wilted leaves.

The common stalk borer is primarily a weed insect, the entomologists say, and is found most commonly around the edges of fields.

In gardens, plants attacked by the borer should be removed and the worms killed to prevent them from entering other plants. Sometimes a plant may be saved by removing the worm thru a slit, cut on one side of the stalk, starting at the hole made by the worm.

The cutting of weeds in June and early July is only apt to drive the worms into the crops unless the weeds are removed before they dry, the entomologists say.

In August the worms will change to a resting stage or pupa preparatory to becoming a moth. At that time they are unable to crawl and must remain in the weeds if cut.

In late summer the moths fly to weed patches and lay eggs which remain over winter. It is advisable to plow under all weedy fields in summer or fall and to burn the weeds around the fences in fall or early spring. This prevents a repitition of the damage the following year.

The common stalk borer may easily be identified by these characteristics: it has four longitudinal chocolate brown stripes running the full length of the body and a band of the same color encircling the body at the fourth, fifth, sixth and seventh segments. It attacks corn much easier than the European corn borer and does not resemble it in appearance.

Despite many scares caused by the heavy damage of the common stalk borer this year in corn fields, there are no European corn borers in Iowa to the knowledge of Ames entomologists. However, they want to receive any specimens of borers working in corn with which the farmer or local county agent is not familiar so that steps may be immediately taken toward control should an outbreak occur.

ALFALFA LEADS AS HAY CROP

Alfalfa is Iowa's best legume hay crop, from the standpoint of yield per acre, and alsike is the poorest, judging from the experiments carried on at Iowa State College. In these tests, alfalfa has averaged 3 1-2 tons an acre.

The second best yielder has been mammoth red clover, followed in order by medium, red, biennial white sweet clover, biennial yellow sweet clover and alsike.

In order to secure the best results, the tests have shown that alfalfa should not be cut more than twice the first year and three times hereafter.

HUNT IOWA'S BEST NUT TREE

Iowa boys and girls this year are asked to help find the best nut tree in the state. This fall there will be a nut gathering contest in October and November and later county contests to find the best nuts in each county. The state-wide contest will be held next winter at Iowa State College during the boys' Junior Short Course.

Announcement of this contest was recently made by I. T. Bode, extension forester at Iowa State College, Ames. Complete information regarding the contest may be obtained by writing to him.

Many good native nut trees have been found in Iowa, but the best are probably still unknown, Mr. Bode says. He urges any boy or girl who knows of a tree which yields large, thin-shelled nuts that crack easily, to enter some of the product of that tree, for it may be a prize winner. Any kind of nuts may be entered in the contest.

POULTRY BUSINESS TO IMPROVE

Poultry and egg prices are low and feed prices relatively high, but despite this situation it is a poor time for Iowa farmers to forsake their poultry business, in the judgment of H. A. Bittenbender, head of the Poultry Husbandry Department at Iowa State College.

"Iowa farmers, in the very heart of the grain producing region, can produce eggs and poultry, if they will, more economically than can anyone anywhere else in the United States," says Mr. Bittenbender. "In some sections of the east and west, poultry raising has increased over 100 percent in recent years, but these people are seriously handicapped as compared with the Iowa farmer for they must buy and ship in their feeds from the middlewest. Then, in turn they must in many instances ship their eggs and poultry across the continent to market.

"While Iowa farmers may have to take much smaller profits from their poultry business for a year or two than they have taken the last five or six, better days are bound to come and this is no time to quit.

"The commercial, specialized poultry farms, such as are found in the Petaluma district of California, are the ones that come and go. When feed prices are cheap and egg and poultry prices relatively high, they are able to compete favorably with this section, but in times like the present, they are very much at a disadvantage. Many of the fine farms in these poultry districts may now be bought very cheaply."

To meet the present situation of rather low egg prices, Mr. Bittenbender urges culling rigidly to get rid of loafing hens. Furthermore a good balanced ration should be fed. Many flocks recently have been thrown into a molt because the ration has been restricted, he says. This is a mistake for it will mean lower production during the next few months when good profits might be realized if production were held up.

Another thing that Iowa poultrymen should work toward in these times is improving the quality of the eggs they sell. Marketing good, clean, fresh eggs will help in stimulating people to eat and buy more eggs and thus improve the price. Eggs during the hot months should be gathered a couple of times a day and marketed every other day if possible.

The layers should be gathering at this season, a mash containing ground corn, oats, wheat they should have skimmilk to drink if possible, plenty of green feed and minerals.

FASHIONS, FADS, FOIBLES

Fashions of recent years have been hard on the mature dame, requiring her to wear the severe lines of the sweetly simple dresses worn by her daughter of sixteen. But jabots, surplice fronts, and general elaboration is coming back and they are more kindly to the middle aged. Also they add dignity and elegance to the appearance. We are having richer colors and finer materials, which have a similar effect. The swathing of the neck in scarfs or furs and the wearing of hat brims which cast a mysterious shade over the face are becoming to the not-young.

Shirring is a favorite treatment of fullness these days. There are shirred yokes, shirred sleeves, shirred vestees, shirred collars and cuffs and decorations of all kinds.

Sport clothes are the chief apparel of the business woman by day, though she knows as little about the morning golf tee as the afternoon pink tea. They are simple, free from furbelows, were meant for use and action and suit her to a "T".

SMALL PACKAGES

Canners and packers are now putting up small packages of food for small families. This removes one great cause of waste and will induce many housewives to purchase the small amounts who were afraid to lay in the larger supply in the large packages.

Profitable Hog Feeding

Here are a few tables for the farmer to study who wants to make the most out of his hogs:

12 bushel Corn	$10.20	7 bushel Corn	$ 5.95
Hogs sell at	8.00	40 lbs. Tankage	1.35
Loss	$2.20	Profit	.70
5 bushel Corn			$4.25
50 lbs. SPEAR Hog Feed			1.40
Profit			$2.35

All based on cost of producing 100 lbs. of pork selling at $8.00 per 100 lbs.

We have a lot of feeders using the SPEAR Hog Feed and they all say the same thing—that it is the cheapest and the best feed that they ever used.

We have just unloaded another car. We would like to have you give it a fair trial by using one or two bags; then let us make you a price on ton or half ton lots.

We have a full line of BABY CHICK FEED, so we can take care of the late hatches.

Charge for Small Checking Accounts

For a long time we did not believe the small checking accounts were so numerous; or that our loss with them was as large as it is.

In checking our books we find 230 checking accounts with a balance of less than $50.00 each. The total balance of these accounts is $3,245.00. One-half of the checks we handle each day are drawn on these accounts.

Clerical expense and cost of Checks, Pass Books, Ledger Supplies, etc., have increased to such an extent that we are compelled to make a small charge.

Beginning with July 1st, 1927, a charge of 50 cents per month will be made on checking accounts that have a minimum balance of less than $25.00. This, however, would not apply to accounts of religious societies, lodges, schools and the like; or, when not more than three checks per month are charged against the account.

On checks that are returned for "want of funds" a charge of 25 cents per check will be made.

If you have to borrow $25.00, it would cost you $2.00 per year, which is very cheap for the benefits derived from a checking account.

With the above arrangement, we believe that most of the costs incurred with these smaller accounts will be paid by those who find checking accounts an advantage.

The 50 cent charge has not been instituted with the idea of collecting this charge, but to induce a balance of over $25.00.

Patrons of banks are the only ones that profit by good banking which makes good banks. May we have your co-operation?

Your Public Utility Company

AS A CUSTOMER

The worth while citizen is one who helps build his community through production of commodities, and of substantial properties that benefit not only him, but also his neighbors, or by valuable services rendered that add to the well being of the community; this good citizen shares the burden of his community by paying taxes for the public good.

The money for these taxes he earns by productive labor or service, and this is the kind of a citizen your Electric Company has proven itself to be, for this Company builds for the benefit of the whole community, and pays its just share of the taxes.

It may be of interest to know that Public Utility Companies, including railroads, pay about $4.53 in taxes out of each $100 of their gross income, and that this amount does not include Federal Income and profit taxes.

As a comparison, agriculture pays $2.50 in taxes of each $100 earned, while banks pay $3.58 in taxes, mining $2.41, and manufacturing 94 cents in taxes out of each $100 earned, showing that Public Utility Companies pay $3.59 more from each $100 of income than does even such an important industry as manufacturing.

In consideration of the importance in every respect of the Public Utility Company to your community, is not it reasonable that your own Company should be allowed to earn a sufficient amount to cover its full obligation to the community?

Respectfully,

Central States Electric Company

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I.—Garth Guthrie, Canadian war veteran, having to live in the open on account of weakened lungs, is factor of a Hudson's Bay post at Elkwan. He came back from the conflict with a permanently scarred face, which he realizes cost him the love of his fiancee, Edith Falconer. Sir Charles Guthrie, his brother, is a millionaire war profiteer.

CHAPTER II.—With Etienne Savanne, halfbreed, his firm friend, Garth meets Doctor Quarrier, geologist, and his sister Joan. Their schooner has drifted ashore. Quarrier complains he has been robbed by a man known as "Laughing McDonald" or to the Indians as "McDonald Ha! Ha!" because of a gear which gives him a perpetual grin. McDonald is Garth's competitor for the fur trade. At Elkwan an Indian girl, Ninda, tuberculosis victim, whom Garth has befriended, is dying. Quarrier hints that Ninda is Garth's mistress, which is hotly resented. Joan, trained war nurse, cares for Ninda, but the girl dies.

CHAPTER III.—Garth tells Joan part of the reasons for his presence at Elkwan. He takes the Quarriers to Albany, from whence they can proceed to Montreal. Charles Guthrie writes reproaching his brother for not coming home. Charles' wife assures him Ethel still loves him, but Garth in his heart knows better. His scarred face has separated them.

CHAPTER IV.—Three of McDonald's party visit Elkwan seeking to buy gun shells. From them Garth learns of evil talk among the Indians concerning him and Ninda, and realizes Quarrier will spread his version of the affair.

CHAPTER V.—With Etienne's help Garth wins the friendship of Saul Souci, "medicine man" and treaty chief of the Crees, and gets his promise to persuade the Crees to take their furs to Elkwan instead of to McDonald. Garth is ambushed by Joe Mokoman, Ninda's reputed father, whom the factor had driven from Elkwan. "Shot," Garth's airedale companion on many battlefields in France, saves him, and the Indian is taken, a prisoner, to Elkwan.

CHAPTER VI.—Garth sends Mokoman to McDonald with a message of defiance, and the war is on.

As the dog-team left the coast and followed the rough river trail into the hills, its toil began, and Etienne's wisdom in bringing a toboggan instead of a sea sled equipped with runners was vindicated. For once under the lee of hills, they found snow deep on the shell of the river and in places, where wind eddies had dipped into the valley, new drift, through which they broke trail on snowshoes for the sled, while the dogs, who had galloped over the brushed sea-ice, wallowed to their traces. From the river fringe of willows and alders the black spruce scrub reached back up the slopes to fade and disappear under the shoulders of the barrens. There low junipers and hardy Labrador tea alone survived the hammering of the winds on the undulating miles of blueberry heath and caribou moss, swept, over exposed areas, of all snow.

Suddenly, as they rounded a bend which had shut off all view upstream, Etienne, who was ahead breaking trail, shouted and stopped, pointing in the direction of some thick scrub in the distance.

"Camp up dere!"

Rising in the still air of the valley, a wisp of bluish smoke hung against the background of black spruce.

"Good! Now we'll get some news of Souci."

Spurred by the quickened pace of the trail breaker and the call of Garth, the five huskies threw their shoulders into the collars. Then, farther on, a stretch of wind-packed snow gave them footing and the yelping team, led by Shot, raced to the tips of the hunters' camp.

"Kequay!" called Etienne, approaching the tipis half buried in the snow for protection from the wind and circled by the usual debris and paraphernalia of a winter camp. Turning to Garth he said: "De men are on de trap-line wid de dogs."

Again he called, and, after a space, a shawled head was thrust through the door flap of a tent.

"Where's your man?" asked Savanne in Cree.

"On the lines. Who are you?"

"We are from Elkwan." And, as the woman emerged from the tipi followed by another and two children, Etienne saw that he was talking with Indians from the lower rivers—strangers.

"Have you seen Saul Souci, the Elkwan Treaty Chief? Where is the camp of his sons—what river?"

The swart faces of the Cree women defied the sharp scrutiny of the halfbreed. Surprise, doubt, appeared to curb a desire to laugh at the question of the stranger. They met each other's black eyes in a quizzical look; then the elder of the two said: "Souci, the shaman, we have not seen. His sons are said to camp north of here on the Rabbit river."

The acute brain of Etienne strove to solve the riddle of the squaw's secret amusement. At last he decided that Joe Mokoman had won over their men to the free-trader, but why Souci had not appeared on the Ptarmigan was a mystery.

"Do you know the strait has closed? You can cross to Elkwan for the New Year's feast," he hazarded.

The women smiled. "We go to the trader at Seal cove with our fox pelts," said the old squaw. "There we get honest prices for fur—from the trader who always laughs."

It was evident that here Joe Mokoman had done his work well. Then Etienne cautiously began his countermining. His dark face set in a look of surprise and horror. "Did you not hear?" he cried.

"No!"

"Why this trader brought that face from the land of demons across the Big Water? He angered them. He is a sorcerer and bewitches those who bring him their pelts." Etienne hastily interpreted the conversation to Guthrie as he watched the effect of his bombshell on the startled faces of the squaws.

"He makes bad medicine?" gasped the women.

Savanne gravely nodded his hooded head, then added: "He has bewitched Joe Mokoman to betray the Cree hunters and bring them to his boat. Those who go will never love their wives and families again," he remarked with finality.

At the last the faces of the squaws visibly grayed. They chattered together excitedly. Etienne's explanation of the cause of the mutilation of McDonald had struck deep into the marrow of their superstitions. He hastily drove his advantage home.

"Saul Souci will tell you that the trader McDonald Ha! Ha! is a friend of demons."

"Saul Souci?" cried a squaw in protest. "He is a shaman and friend of the trader who laughs."

It was the turn of Savanne to have his mental balance jarred. Souci the friend of McDonald? What could they mean? But he was equal to the emergency.

"Souci, the friend of McDonald Ha! Ha! Mokoman tells that tale to the hunters because he fears Souci the shaman."

Disturbed though she was, the Cree woman laughed in Etienne's face. "Mokoman was here this morning—there are his sled tracks. One sleep ago he says Souci was at the schooner of the trader and they shook hands. Souci is the friend of McDonald Ha! Ha!"

"Mokoman lies!" stormed the startled half-breed, but the germ of a suspicion of the old conjurer's loyalty quickened in his brain. "Are there camps at the head of the river in the barrens?" he asked, keen to catch the Ojibwa and old Saul, the traitor, at their work.

"Yes, you will see them before the light dies, and there are more on the north fork."

"Remember," cautioned the puzzled half-breed, as he turned to his dogs, "the boat at Seal cove is full of demons—bewitched. Those who go will never look again with joy on their wives and children." And with this parting shot, the shrewd Savanne called "Bo'-jo'!" and joined his chief.

As they again took the river trail, from here on ice-hard from constant use by the teams of the hunters, Etienne gave Guthrie the gist of his talk.

"Old Saul—at the schooner? It's only a lie of that Ojibwa," objected Garth, unable to reconcile the old man's simplicity and directness with this deceit. "A lie to weaken the effect of Saul's coming to the island to work for us."

"Mebbe so, but I t'ink somet'ing ver' strange here. Dees camp ees near de shore—why has Saul not come here?"

"They may have lied. He may have been here," suggested Garth. Etienne shook his head. "No, he nevaire cum here or dey talk more 'bout heem. He ees medicine man and de squaw would talk mooch eef he cum."

"Well, let's see what the people above here say. Then we can compare the stories and judge better what to believe, and what our next move is. If Saul has turned yellow—we're surely done."

Facing the man riding behind him, Etienne nodded. "Eef Saul work for de schooner, he weel tak' de Elkwan Cree wid heem." Then the lean features of the half-breed tightened. His small eyes closed to slits, as he viciously cracked his whip. "But dat ol' shaman weel mak' hees las' medicine," he rasped.

The hate in the face of the dog driver was so intense that Garth objected: "You can't shoot him up for that, you know. It would only react on Marie and the children, and on me."

Etienne's mouth curled in an inscrutable smile. "No one but Saul Souci weel know who meet heem on de trail."

"I guess you'd be capable of ambushing him for this, but we're not dead yet. Let's see what the hunters at the head of the river say."

In the scrub rimming the shores of the first lake from which the tundra undulated to the skyline, the men in quest of Saul Souci found the tipis of the hunters. It was a camp of three families and smoke from the supper fires already lifted above the spruce when the arrival of the dog-team raised a general alarm from the huskies fastened in the scrub.

"Kequay! kequay!" called Etienne, and a shock of black hair was thrust through a door flap, as a curious Cree emerged to meet the strangers.

"He's not from Elkwan," dropped Guthrie disappointed, as the Indian approached to shake hands.

"'Allo, Achille!" And Etienne warmly gripped the hand of the Indian, who then greeted Garth. "Achille Laguerre from Kapiskau, and me, ol' fr'en'," announced the patently pleased head man to his chief.

We'll learn something now, thought the factor, as they drove the dogs into the spruce, fed them their frozen whitefish, and chained them separately to trees. As the December sun was long down and their tent lashed under the toboggan cover, Etienne accepted the hospitality of Laguerre's smoke-filled tipi. There, with eyes weeping from the unaccustomed smoke, Garth ate boiled rabbit and lake-trout from the copper kettle hung above the fire, from which the wife and numerous children of Achille gorged in common. But the appetite sharpened by the ride up the valley in the keen air was impervious to the informality of Cree table manners and Garth's tin cup went back to the steaming stew and the tea pail with the regularity of his smoke-tanned host and hostess, until his belt warned of surfeit.

He passed to each of the Crees a twist of company nigger-head, and pipe smoke swiftly added to the opaqueness of the tipi air. Then Etienne, who had avoided the subject of Souci and the schooner in his gossip with the curious and perplexed Laguerre, opened with:

"You know de strait ees froze?"

Achille, who spoke English, gravely nodded. "You cum to de island. Eet mus' be so."

"Oou, mon ami. We are here. Eet ees enough. Why, Achille Laguerre," he went on, probing the small, half-shut eyes of the half-breed, "do M'sieu' Guthrie and I, Etienne Savanne, cross de ice to mak' talk wid you?" Etienne paused and blew a cloud of smoke along the stem of his pipe, which his teeth gripped.

Achille grinned widely. "You cum to mak' fight for de fox," he chuckled.

"You are mos' smart man, ma fr'en,' but you mak' beeg meestake. We cum to tak' de fox back to Elkwan wid de peopl' for beeg tam at la bonne annee, New Year."

"Ah-hah!"

"You go to Kapiskau, Achille?"

The Indian slowly shook his head. "I go to de beeg boat. He pay beeg price for pelt."

Garth leaned eagerly forward to hear the counter stroke which Etienne was waiting to launch.

"Ah-hah!" For a space, the crackling of a spruce knot was the only sound in the tipi. Then Savanne began: "You not ver' smart man, Achille. You leesen to dat 'Jibwa Wabeno, Mokoman. Ah-hah, you not so smart man. . . . We tak' heem to dis island wid old Souci. You know why?" Etienne paused dramatically to relight his pipe. "So McDonal' put de devil into heem."

Nervously twisting her hands, the squaw of Achille stared at the speaker from awe-filled eyes. The stolid features of the half-breed reflected curiosity, doubt—but no fear.

"I put dat Mokoman undair de ice up de Elkwan—he mak' troubl' for us; but we weesh to have devil put een heem by McDonal' Ha! Ha!"

"Mokoman was here," dryly countered Achille.

"Was Souci wid heem?" snapped Etienne, as a dog a bone, and Garth's pulse quickened as he waited for the reply.

"No, Souci ees ovair de hill, nord."

"W'en you say Saul was at de schooner?"

Again Guthrie leaned to catch Achille's return.

The half-breed waited, spat into the fire, then said: "You hear dat?"

Etienne nodded. Now he would learn the truth from a friend who, in the old days of their comradeship, had never lied; but, in his extremity, he himself launched brazenly into outrageous fabrication. "We sen' old Saul to de schooner to talk wid de devil of McDonal'."

"The old man's wiry," objected Bull, spinning out the talk. "I want my partner outside the back door, so the old man don't throw me in. Of course, I'll try it alone if you say so, but if my partner—"

An outburst from Barbanet cut short the talk; Bull had said all he wanted to say, anyway. But, still maundering on, he was unceremoniously pushed through the partly open door back into the room. Selwood slipped around the corner to where Pardaloe, close to a window, was impatiently awaiting action. Selwood repeated what he had heard, directed him to watch the back door of the barber shop, take any necessary measures, and to detain Fyler till Selwood could get back to him.

"Say the word," said Pardaloe, "and I'll fire the whole dashed joint. I've got everything laid right here, and good tinder to do it with."

"Don't set this place on fire till we get everybody out of it," exclaimed Selwood. "I must see the inside of the place. I can't plan anything in the dark."

"Here's a sash loose," mumbled Pardaloe, balked of his prey, "right here. Why don't you—"

Selwood, knowing the general layout of the inside of the big room, jumped at the chance. "There's a curtain in front of it," continued Pardaloe.

"Out with the sash," said Selwood instantly. "Easy, Bill."

It needed no more than the prying off of a sash-stop, which Pardaloe managed with the blade of his bowie-knife, without making much noise. He lifted aside the sash. A curtain, tacked up inside, covered the window opening; and while Pardaloe noiselessly set down the sash, Selwood caught an edge of the curtain in his fingers and peered inside.

It looked like a fair chance. The corner was not dark, but it was not brightly lighted. A table stood close to the side of the window through which Selwood was looking. On one side of the table sat a man leaning forward, with his head buried in his arms, as if asleep. His hat lay on the table. Selwood watched him pretty closely for a moment—he was the nearest element of danger — but reached the conclusion he was stupid with drink. The curtain was short. Hung from hooks at the upper corners, it reached only to the window apron. Selwood could see men standing in small groups not ten feet away, but the entire room, probably for reasons of safety, was only meagerly lighted.

The gambler thought he could make it. He whispered brief instructions to Pardaloe.

"If you don't hear any shooting, Bill, you'll know I'm moving safe. If you hear one shot, just pay no attention. Have your shotgun up here on the sill; the instant you hear two shots, fire one barrel at that big lamp." Selwood pointed to the lamp hanging in the front end of the room. "Let the other barrel go into the middle of the crowd—that will give me a chance for the front door."

"John, I might hit y'," objected Pardaloe in a ferocious whisper.

"If I'm in that crowd, Bill, after two shots are fired, a few buckshot more or less won't hurt my feelings," said Selwood reassuringly. "Just let go quick at that lamp—that's the main thing. I'll make what noise I can with my gun to help you out. Now set down your gun and give me a lift—I must get in there with my back to the window and both hands free."

The mule boss took him under the armpits, that Selwood's hands might be free, lifted him, and the next moment Selwood, watching the nearest men closely, stood inside the room with his feet on the floor. Pardaloe quickly rehung the curtain.

It was the work of the next moment for Selwood to reel to and sink into an empty chair opposite the sleepy man, and, peering from under his cap, to study the scene.

The interior of the place, of notorious repute even among case-hardened men, was not wholly unfamiliar to Selwood, nor had it changed much in the long interval since he had seen it. Neither Bunty nor Atkins was in sight, and Selwood's nervous glance searched the room vainly for a sight of the one man he had taken a desperate chance to see—Starbuck. Men came at intervals out of the back room, but each one closed the door most carefully behind him. It was there, Selwood soon found reason to believe, that the leaders were closeted.

To attempt the inner room meant, he knew, a showdown. Whatever eyes might be fooled in the front room, those in the back room would not be long in discovering his identity. But with a fatality either temperamental or due to his chance-taking career, Selwood made ready to penetrate the second room in a search for Starbuck.

He pushed guardedly at the head of the man opposite him and found after a little fussing that he was fast asleep. The man wore about his neck a bandanna kerchief, and this, Selwood, keeping his eyes well on those about him, gradually disengaged with one hand—twisting it around to where he could loose the knot and draw it from the man's neck. His victim having taken this liberty good-naturedly, Selwood doffed McAlpin's queer-looking cap at a moment that no eyes were turned his way, and after another moment tried on the sleeping man's hat. It fitted well enough, and he did not take it off; but proceedingly slowly, keeping a clear eye on the men nearest, and handling his right forearm as if wounded, Selwood slipped one arm and then the other out of the coat he wore, and laid the purloined neckerchief over the right forearm.

Drawing his revolver from the scabbard in which he had replaced it when sitting down, Selwood, with the grip of the gun in his right hand, wrapped the kerchief loosely over hand and gun together. When arranged to his liking, he drew his small hunting-knife, and gradually slit the bandage on the lower side from end to end, so that it lay hiding his revolver, but ready to jerk off with his free hand. Putting away the knife, he rose and, facing the room, reached with his left hand up behind him and jerked down the window curtain. Sitting down again, he made a rude sling of the curtain, hung it from his neck under his right wrist, and with his left hand slipped his coat back again over his shoulders. Sitting now quite at ease, he drew a leaf of cigarette paper from a waistcoat pocket, laid it on the table, fished a tiny bag of tobacco from a coat pocket, opened it between his teeth and his left hand, taking advantage of that proceeding to take an extra good look at the men in front of him, rolled his cigarette awkwardly on the table before him, pushed it between his lips, and rose to his feet. He drew his hat-brim evenly down, so it was neither high nor low, but exactly shaded his eyes where he stood, and with the cigarette hanging from his lip, moved toward a noisy group of men and asked the nearest one for a match.

Passing this inspection proved easy. He moved from one to another of the talking groups—some of the men were examining revolvers, others stowing cartridges into various pockets, others adjusting ammunition belts—trading tobacco, boasting, and telling stories; but while Selwood recognized more than one of them either as Calabasas worthies or River quarter "rats," none of them uncovered him.

His apprehension thus fairly well allayed, he made his way in easy measure toward the rear end of the room, where the crowd was thicker. He had approached within a dozen feet of the back-room door and was thinking of just how he should maneuver an entrance, when it was suddenly opened, and out walked Harry Barbanet, followed by the redoubtable Bull Page, whose eyes showed mild stimulation.

The moment was delicate. To turn quickly away would only be, he well knew, to excite suspicion and even invite particular inspection; the utmost Selwood could do was to interrupt a conversation near at hand and ask whether the doctor had come.

question that rankled in his mind was: Had Barbanet in that brief, piercing glance discovered him? Was it imagination that was already tricking him into thinking so? He could not be sure. But some instinct told him he had been detected and must measure accordingly. The next moment Barbanet, now following Page, passed Selwood without noticing him—and so close on his left that he brushed him with an impatient shoulder.

It needed only an instant for Selwood to reason that this was precisely the way he himself should have acted if positions were reversed; and he knew Barbanet's astuteness too well to believe he would act, in the circumstances, any differently.

Without hesitation, Selwood, taking advantage of Barbanet's broad shoulder, turned promptly to the left, and, falling into step, walked on directly behind the two—third and last man in a procession heading straight for the lower end of the bar.

It seemed strange to find himself heading so briskly in such company and at such a businesslike gait for a corner of the room that he had so good reason to remember. The old archway had been boarded up, and a batten door had been set roughly into it to lead into the barber shop; it was for this door that Barbanet was heading.

Nothing could have suited Selwood better. But just before reaching the door, Barbanet caught Page's arm, told him to stop, and attempted to turn in behind the bar. At this juncture Selwood in turn caught Barbanet's arm and stopped him.

"Don't bother, Harry; you won't need that gun. Face about—keep straight ahead."

Barbanet felt the quick and unpleasant sensation of a revolver muzzle held to the small of his back. A hand with fingers like steel slipped down his forearm and over his left wrist. Without trying to turn his body, he looked back over his shoulder, surprised, but making no pretense of not knowing who spoke.

"First time I've seen you tonight, John," he remarked, quite undisturbed by this situation.

"No," retorted Selwood in like tones, "this is the second time, Harry."

"I noticed you had a long arm on when I passed you," responded Barbanet, less amiably.

"Not for my friends, Harry—there's a good many strangers in town tonight. Open the barber-shop door, Harry—do it quick."

"There's two men behind it with shotguns."

"They're friendly—you're walking right in there ahead of me. Go on! The way we stand now, there's not a man in this room that could tell whose gun went off if you got hurt, Harry. Open that door."

No frontier crook in his senses would choose certain death before a fighting chance. Barbanet knew perfectly well the alternative. Selwood might not himself escape, but his fate would no longer interest Harry. With ill grace, but without imprudent delay, Barbanet advanced to the door, his left wrist gripped in Selwood's left hand.

"What's a right-hand man doing with a key in his left-hand pocket?" asked Selwood. "Page," he added, pulling Barbanet's arm back, "take the key out of Barbanet's right pants pocket and unlock that door, quick."

"Page," interjected Barbanet, jerking the words out viciously, "you'd better keep out of this."

Bull Page grinned brokenly. Perhaps the remembrance of old abuse at Barbanet's hands—the times he had come thirsty and broke, and gone from Barbanet's bar thirsty and broke, decided him. At all events, after a rapid search, Bull found the key in Barbanet's right-hand trousers pocket, unlocked the door, pushed it open, and Barbanet, followed by Selwood and Bull, passed through into the barber-shop.

CHAPTER XIV

Selwood Finds Christie.

The barber-shop was dark. "What are you looking for," asked Barbanet, lazily sarcastic; "soap or towels?"

"Two men with shotguns," retorted Selwood, while Page fished a match from his pocket and lighted a lamp. "It may be they're in the back room; push ahead; open that door in front of you."

"Another man's got the key to that door," asserted Barbanet, surly now. "You'll have to talk to Starbuck about that."

Selwood, without raising his tone, tried out a double-edged bluff—one that would work either way. "Bull!" he said. "Go back to Starbuck. Tell him Barbanet wants the key to the barber-shop back room. He may give you an evasive answer. If he does, tell him Barbanet is in trouble in the barber-shop and says to give you the key or come a-running if he wants to save what's in the back room.

VARIED PROGRAM ARRANGED FOR LEGION CELEBRATION AND HOMECOMING

Thursday, July 28 Is Date of Big Day

Eagle Grove Municipal Band To Play; Clarion And Dows To Furnish Ball Game

HOMECOMING IN EVENING

A program varied enough to suit any taste or desire has been arranged for the combined Legion Celebration and Homecoming next Thursday, July 28. Beginning at 9 a .m., the day is crammed to the utmost with the widest variety of entertainment that has ever been offered at any celebration or "big day" in the town.

For the Legion entertainment, a program starting at 9 o'clock in the morning with a band concert, ends at midnight with a big dance. Street sports, races, tug-of-war, free acts, horse races, ball game, bicycle races, throwing contest, horseshoe pitching, airplane rides, concessions, shows, and a long range of other attractions fill in the day.

For concerts throughout the day, the Eagle Grove Municipal band has been secured. Clarion and Dows will furnish the base ball game, and as these two teams are both good and very evenly matched, it should be a real battle. The Five Marriotts will give their sensational free act on Main street, and in the morning the children will receive free money dropped from the air.

The Homecoming program proper begins at 5:15 p. m. although the city park will be open all afternoon for Homecoming visitors to meet and visit. Beginning at 5:15, a picnic supper will be served in the park. Family groups wishing to bring their suppers and visit with old friends, will find accommodations in the park as has been the custom at Homecoming heretofore. Following the supper, a program will be held on the platform in the park. The Eagle Grove band will furnish music during the Homecoming picnic hour, and included in the program of the evening will be a variety of musical and vocal numbers by various local persons. As a feature of the program, a number of short talks by former Belmond residents is planned, including talks by Rev. Seth R. Huntington, of Crystal Lake, Illinois, Rev. M. F. Eardley of Anamosa, Iowa; Hon. W. C. Ramsay, Secretary of State of Iowa, Des Moines, and others

Included in the program, among other numbers will be the following:

Boy Scout Saxaphone Orchestra.
Vocal Solo—Mrs. C. O. Fitts.
Flute Solo—Pauline Peterson.
Male Quartette.
Violin Solo—Mrs. W. A. Shake.
Old Time Music by Nihoof Orchestra.

Homecoming headquarters will be maintained in the park, where a Reception Committee will be stationed all afternoon, so "Old Timers" who wish to meet old friends and visit can do so. Anyone who is not a member of the Community Club and has not been solicited to join the picnic supper, is welcome to do so by bringing dishes enough for their own family, sandwiches for the family and a few extras, also enough food of the following dishes in proportion to their family: potato salad, meat loaf, baked beans, pickles, cake. The food will all be placed on tables and served cafeteria style.

A special picture, "Lost at the Front" will be shown at the Lyris Theatre that day. In the evening, the Cass Shows will play.

Something to appeal to anyone will be found in this varied program of events. Make your plans to save out Thursday, July 28, and take in the best celebration Belmond has staged for many years.

PLEASANT TOWNSHIP ROAD HAS BEEN GRAVELED

Graveling was completed last week on the Pleasant township road leading north from the Tom Quinlan corner, at the Great Western railroad, to the Chas. Schmalle corner, a distance of about two and a half miles. This is the road for which subscriptions were recently solicited among the business men.

FAMILY REUNION

A pleasant family reunion took place at the Purcell home in south Belmond, when Mr. and Mrs. Laurel Helland and F. E. Purcell drove from Milwaukee, to spend the week end. On Sunday the Dow family of Cedar Rapids joined the party. Mr. Dow and Mr. Purcell were boyhood friends and playmates, and later becoming brothers-in-law. They had not seen each other for some ten or more years.

Mrs. Purcell, Ronald and Marjorie returned to Milwaukee with Mr. Purcell, Monday, for a few weeks' visit.

EAGLE GROVE WILL TRY BRICK PAVING

The city council at Eagle Grove has let a contract for brick paving on east and west Broadway and on Park avenue. The old paving is to be covered with an inch coat of sand and the brick laid on the sand. Then the brick are to be covered with an inch coat of asphalt. The Eagle Grove council believes that the brick paving will last a lifetime.

HONOR EAGLE GROVE EDITOR ON EIGHTIETH BIRTHDAY

A. H. Barnes was presented with a birthday cake at Monday night's meeting of the Rotary club in recognition of his 80th birthday. Mr. Barnes was born near Bristol, Ill., July 14th, 1847. In 1881 he moved to Miner county, South Dakota, and took up a homestead and tree claim. He still owns the land, there having been but the one transfer from the government to him. In 1896, he bought the Eagle Grove Eagle and has been its editor ever since. The presentation of the birthday memento was made by J. H. Howell, who has been one of Mr. Barnes' neighbors, friends and business associates for nearly 30 years.—Eagle.

Find Two Stills Near Klemme

Fred and Levi Ridder, father and son, were arrested by federal prohibition agents at Klemme Tuesday night following the finding of one of the largest distilling plants that has been uncovered in northern Iowa. Fred Ridder was formerly a blacksmith there and the two have the agency for Nash cars and run a garage.

The equipment and liquor which was found indicates that the men have been doing business on a large scale. Part of the equipment was found in a garage and part of it in a nearby house. It was necessary for the raiders to hire a truck to carry away the equipment and manufactured product.

Airplane Rides the Thing

Airplane rides have been the vogue here the past week, an aviator from Sioux Falls, South Dakota, F. W. Tannent, having his plane parked in the Kaufman field, south of town. Quite a number have gone up and taken a look at the town from above. Mr. Tannent claims to have been in the flying game 11 years, and seems to be an experienced aviator.

Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Rierson, and sons Archie and Glenn, left Tuesday for a trip to the Black Hills.

The Annual Battle

Troops Express Thanks To City

Soldiers Write Letter of Thanks To Legion Post In Belmond

Troop F, 14th U. S. Cavalry, which camped here Friday, were greatly appreciative of the treatment accorded them while in Belmond, and in a letter to the Legion, Capt. Maher, commanding, expressed the thanks of the troop. Friday afternoon a ball game was arranged between the troop and the local team, the troops winning. This outfit will camp in Belmond September 10-11, over the week end on their return trip from Fort Snelling to Fort Des Moines. At that time, September 11, another game will be arranged, and in conjunction with it the troops will give an exhibition cavalry drill at the ball grounds. As they are "regulars" and will have had several months intensive training by that time, this should be something worth coming a long way to see.

SAUERKRAUT!

Ackley World-Journal: I inclose a clipping about sauerkruat. Is there any truth in it? How much should one eat a day?—R. B. W.

A.—The sauerkraut people have certainly had great success with their propaganda. This bit vaguely credits a "Vienna authority" with the assertion that sauerkraut prevents hardening of the arteries. Next, we'll be ordering it, I suppose, to prevent wrinkles and gray hair. Sauerkraut is a wholesome relish if you like it, none better, but don't take the cure-all stuff too seriously. —Dr. Brady in the Health dep't. St. Paul Pioneer Press.

But it has food value—and it put Ackley on the map for about fifteen years with the most unique celebration in the county. Everything has its uses. Before America took to eating peanut shells, sawdust and a few more alleged "breakfast foods" for the stomach's sake, sauerkraut with potatoes in the homes of many mechanics, not only was considered a health food, but was about the whole staff of life during the winter months.

PRISCILLA CLUB PICNIC

The Priscilla club ladies, with their husbands as guests, held an enjoyable picnic supper in the city park, Tuesday evening. Out of town guests were Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Wolle and daughter of Sioux City; Mrs. C. D. Snyder and daughter of Wichita, Kansas.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to express our heartfelt appreciation to the many friends for their expressions of sympathy and acts of kindness in the death of our loved one, Muriel Amblie, and for the beautiful singing and floral offerings.

P. N. Amblie and Family.
The Relatives.

METHODIST MISSIONARY

The meeting for July was held at the J. S. White home. Mesdames J. S. White and Mrs. Trafford were hostesses.

The Standard Bearer girls and Mrs. Courson under the leadership of Mrs. J. F. Snyder presented the lesson. This was attractive and interesting.

Muriel Luick sang a solo.

The Mystery Box was conducted by Mrs. Stapley.

A social hour and delicious refreshments were greatly enjoyed.

Snappy Playing Wins for Locals

Belmond Wins From Blairsburg In Fast Game, Sunday, 9-5

Playing a snappy game, the Belmond team won from Blairsburg, Sunday, 9 to 5. The local team put up a real exhibition of the national sport, making some snappy plays and fielding in good style, while at the bat they demonstrated their superiority over the visitors in a convincing manner. John Chapman, in the box for Belmond, with Paul McNulty behind the plate, proved a combination with much promise. Chapman fanned 15, while McNulty held him up nicely and kept the runners hugging pretty close to the base. Blairsburg had a good team, and put up a good game, but were unable to keep the local boys down. The Belmond team has only been organized a few weeks, and have played but three games, winning two. They show promise of developing, with further practice and experience, into a winning combination before the season is over.

Belmond will play the Klemme team here this coming Sunday, July 24th, the game being called at 3 o'clock.

TELLS OF NORWAY PRICES

In a letter to the Algona Republican, Mrs. Victor Johnson, of that place, who is traveling in Norway, writes of some of the prices prevailing there which will be of interest to many Belmond readers. She says in part:

"Eggs are 48c per two pounds; butter, 94c per two pounds; meat, (beef) 48c per two pounds; cheese, 27c per two pounds; sugar, 22c per two pounds; loaf sugar, 24c per two pounds; oranges, ten for 40c. Their oranges aren't very good, so small and sour. They have wonderful cheese. It isn't cream cheese. I'll try to bring some home when we come so you can taste it. This is the most beautiful country I have ever seen. Mountains are all around and covered with pine trees."

COMMITTEES APPOINTED

At the Luncheon club meeting, Thursday, committees were appointed to investigate the matter of a tourist park, and to see what the prospects are of getting Primary No. 15 south of town, where grading is being done, graveled this year.

LEGION MEMBERS, NOTICE!

All Legion members are requested to be on Main street after supper next Wednesday evening, July 27, to help in erecting stands and platform.

SURPRISE PARTY

Otto Hanson was pleasantly surprised Monday evening, when a number of friends dropped in to help him observe his 27th birthday. The evening was spent in playing bridge, following which refreshments were served.

MARRIED

John Brooks and Mrs. Amanda Johnson of Belmond were united in marriage, at Clarion, the first of the week. Following the ceremony, they left for a week's trip to points in Minnesota. Upon their return they will be at home in the Brooks house opposite the city hall.

IOWA CROP SUMMARY FOR MONTH OF JULY

Comparing the two seasons and their effect upon the crop, Leslie M. Carl, Federal Agricultural Statistician, states that the 1927 corn situation is apparently more favorable than in 1924, but above normal conditions are needed during the remainder of the season if the 1927 crop reaches the average production of the past ten years.

Iowa farmers made a generous reduction of nearly a quarter of a million acres in their corn acreage from the acreage grown in 1925. The present acreage is estimated at 10,954,000 acres as compared with 11,178,00 acres in 1926. Total production in 1926 reached 413,586,000 bushels, compared with the July 1, indication for 350,528,000 bushels for this season.

OATS—A condition of 86 percent of normal is reported for the Iowa oats crop on July 1. This is six points above the condition a year ago and stands approximately at the past ten-year average of 85.5 per cent. Weather conditions during June proved beneficial for early seeded oats, but hot weather caught some of the late oats at the critical period and light, chaffy heads have been reported. Red rust is prevalent in many localities but the damage is not severe. Oats have headed short, excepting early oats and others seeded on bottom lands. Harvesting will begin nomrally early.

An average yield of 37.6 bushels per acre, based upon the July 1 condition estimate, indicates a total production of 224,547,000 bushels. A year ago the total harvest reached only 195,962,000 bushels on an average of 6,221,000 acres. The acreage for 1927 is recorded as 5,972000 acres. Adverse conditions at seeding time not only delayed oat seeding but had the effect of reducing the acreage from that of 1926 by 4 per cent.

WHEAT—Approximately 8,798,000 bushels of winter wheat is the prospective size of this crop for 1927, as indicated by the condition report on July 1, of 89 per cent of normal. Winter wheat is being produced on 425,000 acres in Iowa this season, as compared with an acreage of 340,000 acres in 1926. The indicated yield per acre this season of 20.7 bushels is nearly one bushel smaller than the 1926 average yield and is more than one bushel larger than the average yield for the past ten years. A year ago the total winter wheat production was recorded at 7,310,000 bushels, and the average production for the past five years is 10,115,000 bushels.

The spring wheat crop is expected to total at least 662,000 bushels according to its condition of 88 per cent of normal on July 1. This crop is being grown on 43,000 acres, as compared with an average of only 36,000 acres in 1926. The total crop of 1926 was 554,000 bushels, with an average yield of 15.4 bushels per acre. The July 1, 1927 condition forecasts an average yield the same as last year. The average yield for the past ten years is 14.47 bushels per acre.

PASTURES and Hay—Pastures have continued to show the benefits of the spring rains and are in advance of the condition as shown on July 1 for any of the past six years. Their reported condition this season is 94 per cent of normal as compared with 96 per cent on July 1 of 1920. During the past two years pastures suffered severely from difficult moisture but they have regained their normal condition this season.

ALL TAME HAY—The hay crop is being grown on approximately the same acreage this season as in 1926, namely 3,072,000 acres. The condition on July 1 was 91 per cent of normal and indicates a production of 5,315,000 tons, at an average yield of 1.73 tons per acre. Last year the production was recorded as 3,845,000 tons.

Tax Ferrits On Job At Clarion Uncover $275,000.00 More Property For Taxation

STILL CLAIM PAY TOO HIGH

The tax ferret item in these notes last week brought forth considerable comment on the part of tax payers, many of whom think the work should have been performed by county officers, and that salaries paid the ferrets are too high. To both of which Supervisor Mehl holds opposite views. In the first place he states that the county officers are not competent in his judgment to handle the work. Not that they were mentally incompetent, but not experienced in such matters. There are many who will disagree with him on that score. Exceptions were also taken to figures given because they were "misleading and unfair." Our reporter secured all information at the court house from the bills filed by the tax ferrets and paid by the board of supervisors and from the contract with the ferrets, authorized by the board. In support of his contention regarding wages paid the fererts Mr. Mehl states that a large amount of unlisted property has been uncovered by the ferrets that will be placed on the books and subject to the 1927 tax; that the county pays no commission for this work, but will be benefited by the tax received, that this sum will greatly reduce the high wages complained of. We have investigated this matter at the office of the tax ferrets and were informed that property aggregating $275,946.00 had been uncovered. That is a big sum to be sure, but for argumentative purposes suppose we call it even $300,000.00. The tax on that amount of monies and credits, computed on the basis of six mills, is $1800.00. Add this sum to the amount reported last week and the tax ferrets are still receiving nearly 22 per cent for their work. Not a bad fee when one considered the fact that the ferrets had access to the books of three closed banks.

Approval was given to the sale of 240 acres in section 15 of Troy township by the Citizens State bank of Eagle Grove to C. R. James for $39,000. This is an average of $162.50 per acre. The court allowed the receiver for the bank to pay a commission of $600 to the agent who effected the sale.

F. H. Brooks was discharged as receiver of the business of G. W. Hanson of Galt, after having closed up the business.

The Nebraska Buick Auto Co., petitions the district court for judgment on account in the sum of $233.28 against Wm. B. Evans, who formerly conducted the Clarion Duco shop.

Ed. Milligan, of the territory between Belmond and Rowan, was fined $100 by Justice Triggs last week for having a half gallon of dandelion wine in his possession. He claimed he found it under a culvert, but he paid the penalty.

T. L. Knight was denied a preferred claim in the Citizens State bank of Goldfield, defunct. Knight alleged that he had deposited pension money in the bank which should entitle him to a preferred standing in paying depositors. The court found that Knight had deposited other monies and the deposits of various funds were so intermingled that they cannot be separated and divided, and he must be required to share in the payments on the same basis as other depositors.

Helen Joan Voight, one of the women arrested on statutory charges at Eagle Grove, has been sent to the woman's reformatory at Rockwell City as a result of violating the parole granted her at the time she was before the court three weeks ago. Before she left Eagle Grove, on the advice of the judge, she issued a check which proved to be no good at the bank, and the offense brought about further prosecution. She was apprehended at New Ulm, Minn., and was taken to Rockwell City on Saturday by Deputy Leonard and Mrs. Fred Johnson after her parole had been revoked.

A. G. Saunders of Eagle Grove was taken to the state institution for feeble minded at Woodward on Sunday by Sheriff Johnson and Marshal Reynolds of Eagle Grove. The patient was released about a year ago from the asylum at Cherokee. —Monitor.

Reading the stories coming out from the Black Hills, one cannot help but feel that every effort is being put forth to pave the way for a third term for Coolidge. Visitors of prominence are quoted as saying the President is winning the middle west; that the hard feelings from his veto of the McNary-Haugen bill are being worn away, and that he is certain to get the delegation from this state or that state. "Agriculturists" who come away are quoted as saying the president has a bill under way that will solve the farm problem, and that the country is beginning to learn the veto was for the best. Politicians give out interviews stating the discontent is confined principally to Iowa, and that the rest of the nation is rapidly becoming stronger and stronger for Coolidge. Every note from the Black Hills is of an optimistic nature; Coolidge is gaining in strength and popularity, the people are learning how great and wise the president is, the discontent is dieing out, the farmers are for him, and even Iowa is swinging into line. Maybe. And again, perhaps not. Naturally nothing but good news will come out of the South Dakota presidential camp; you cannot expect the ring to give out anything of an opposite nature. And in all the statements, the third term is minimized, belittled, and shoved aside as bosh. They know that the third term bugaboo is not an idle thing, but a vital factor in the race, and naturally it is to their purpose and the purpose of every "loyal" party periodical to belittle it. But the third term is a factor which every American voter should seriously consider. Washington in establishing the precedent, did not do so without cause; Jefferson, in carrying it on, must have had good reasons. Grant could not break this unwritten law, and Roosevelt fared no better. Coolidge is not a bigger man than either, and certainly no better or wiser than Washington or Jefferson. If the third term stop-rule can be safely violated, then what is to prevent a fourth term, if 12 years then why not 16 or 20—and ultimately a dictator or a monarchy? There must be men in the republican party who are as large calibre as Coolidge: since when has all the wisdom and ability and knowledge of the republican party been so centered in one man that no other can fill the position? That is all bunk; there are bigger men by far in republican ranks today than Coolidge. Who imagines for a moment that Dawes and Lowden and Hoover and others are not more able than the president? Outside of his economy program, Coolidge never has demonstrated any ability of a presidential calibre. Then why this rush to crush any opposition? Why this vast system to keep his possible candidacy always in the limelight? Who, just who, is so anxious to see him remain—and why? Do not look for any unfavorable comment from the Black Hills; but likewise, do not let it fool you into thinking there will be no opposition to his candidacy. Remember that one thing came out of the war which has remained: Propaganda.

WE certainly had to LAUGH when we heard about
MIKE—"Young Mike"—Luick
BEING held up by the game
WARDEN in Minnesota last WEEK when Mike was COMING home after a
FISHING trip. The warden
CAUGHT Mike tearing thru
THE atmosphere and finally STOPPED him and asked to SEE Mike's fish, and Mike
TURNED as blue as some of
THE blue gills at Cornelia.
SO the warden looked into
MIKE's fish box, and Mike
HAD A lot of stuff piled
IN on top of the fish,
BOOTS, and tackle, and raincoats
AND such like, and the warden
YANKED it all out till he GOT down to the fish.
FORTUNATELY Mike had had
POOR luck and the warden
DIDN'T find over the limit
(WHICH was queer) so he TOLD Mike it was O. K. But
MIKE was peeved by that
TIME and he says "You
PULLED all that stuff out,
NOW put it back!" And
THE warden gave him a queer
LOOK—and piled it back!
BUT when you pack things in
LIKE that you have to pack
AND the warden didn't pack,
HE just dumped, so Mike had
TO yank it out and do it
HIMSELF and by that time we
RATHER think he wished he HAD gone fishing
IN a tin can, like we do.

ANOTHER one of those
PESTIFEROUS peddlers who SELL burnt matches for $2
AND get away with it was in TOWN Saturday night, only
THIS fellow was selling
BLANKETS, all wool and a yard
WIDE, guaranteed not to rip,
TEAR or stretch, will not
WRINKLE, wear or fade, now
BEING used by the president
TO keep out the fleas in the BLACK Hills, and the spieler
SPIELED a spiel and got a
CROWD and auctioned off the
BLANKETS to the highest bidder,
AND most of them paid more
THAN they would have to
FOR a good blanket at home,
BUT they thought they got a
BARGAIN and went away happy,
AND they'll probably stay that WAY for a week or two until
THEY begin to use the blanket,
AND the fellow was happy because
HIS bank account grew some,
AND the city got a few dollars
LICENSE from him, so everybody's
HAPPY except the home-town
MERCHANTS and they'll just
HAVE to lump it, we guess.

Silo Makes Cheap Feed

SILAGE makes cheap feed of the best quality. It will take the place of much hay that will be a short crop and high priced in many sections this year. It will pay big profits whether fed to young stock, to milk cows, or to beef cattle.

BUILD A DENISON EVERLASTING SILO NOW, FOR THESE REASONS.

1. You won't have to worry about your hay crop, or the danger of frost damaging your corn crop.
2. Your silo will be water-tight and air-tight. Surplus silage will keep over for another year.
3. Air cells in the silo, and its relining pads in the motor joints, protect the silage from frost.
4. Your silo will not shrink or swell, warp or twist, so no hoops to loosen.
5. It will last for generations, you will not have to adjust, paint, or rebuild it.

The Splinters
"Every Splinter Has A Point"

Vol. 2 — Tuesday, July 21, 1927. — No. 14

Published in the Interests of the People of Belmond and Vicinity by the GREENLANDER LUMBER COMPANY.

A certain business man of our acquaintance has been a summer widower for ten days or so, and brags that he hasn't had to wash a breakfast dish. He drinks milk out of the bottle, takes the toast off the toaster, and butters it from the butter package. Bananas are eaten from the peeling. The butter knife is held under the faucet, and breakfast is over. And everybody knows a coffee percolator should never be washed.

Before they were married he told her he would move heaven and earth for her. And now he's raising hell.

We would like the fellow who knows it all much better if he would forget part of it.

We had the term "mixed choir" explained to us yesterday. Some of 'em can sing, and some of 'em can't.

Harm L. Pals is getting ready to build a new corn crib and granary.

Wouldn't it be fine if those who have money would use it in the way those who haven't money think they would use it if they had it?

Here's a little repartee that happened in our own place of business the other day:
"I can't hear myself think."
"Well, you're not missing much."

"There were dozens of people at the train to see me off."
"Did you pay any of them?"

The creosoted fence post we're selling is the greatest idea we've ever seen. Once you build with Long Bell Creosoted post you can forget the fencing. You're all through because these posts are absolutely guaranteed to outlast the heaviest fencing that's made.

LOOK PLEASANT, PLEASE

In having your picture taken, never wear a hat. The hat is certain to go out of style in a hurry and make you look like a burlesque of yourself as you gaze at it a few years hence. Also it will betray your age, as one can judge of the period of a picture by the style of a hat.

The more simple and classical your general appearance can be, the more the picture will be attractive for all time. It is a mistake to have the full figure, as the style of dress, even its length, and the very thickness of the waist tells its story of time. The wasp waist and trailing skirts of yesteryear are laughable today. Certain great paintings will be beautiful for all time and their subjects will never be out of style. The hair done au natural, simply parted and drawn lightly back, in a classical mode will do for any age. Extreme styles soon pass. The head and bust with the utmost of simplicity in lines make the lasting picture which you will be proud to show to your children and children's children in years to come.

Wear an evening gown with its simple neck line, look natural and simple, not fussy, and feel your best. Do not pose for a picture when tired out, half ill, angry, or worried.

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I.—Garth Guthrie, Canadian war veteran, having to live in the open on account of weakened lungs, is factor of a Hudson's Bay post at Elkwan. He came back from the conflict with a permanently scarred face, which he realizes cost him the love of his fiancee, Edith Falconer. Sir Charles Guthrie, his brother, is a millionaire war profiteer.

CHAPTER II.—With Etienne Savanne, halfbreed, his firm friend, Garth meets Doctor Quarrier, geologist, and his sister Joan. Their schooner has drifted ashore. Quarrier complains he has been robbed by a man known as "Laughing McDonald" or to the Indians as "McDonald Ha! Ha!" because of a scar which gives him a perpetual grin. McDonald is Garth's competitor for the fur trade. At Elkwan an Indian girl, Ninda, tuberculosis victim, whom Garth has befriended, is dying. Quarrier hints that Ninda is Garth's mistress, which is hotly resented. Joan, trained war nurse, cares for Ninda, but the girl dies.

CHAPTER III.—Garth tells Joan part of the reasons for his presence at Elkwan. He takes the Quarriers to Albany, from whence they can proceed to Montreal. Charles Guthrie writes reproaching his brother for not coming home. Charles' wife assures him Ethel still loves him, but Garth in his heart knows better. His scarred face has separated them.

CHAPTER IV.—Three of McDonald's party visit Elkwan seeking to buy gun shells. From them Garth learns of evil talk among the Indians concerning him and Ninda, and realizes Quarrier will spread his version of the affair.

CHAPTER V.—With Etienne's help Garth wins the friendship of Saul Souci, "medicine man" and treaty chief of the Crees, and gets his promise to persuade the Crees to take their furs to Elkwan instead of to McDonald. Garth is ambushed by Joe Mokoman, Ninda's reputed father, whom the factor had driven from Elkwan. "Shot," Garth's airedale companion on many battlefields in France, saves him, and the Indian is taken, a prisoner, to Elkwan.

CHAPTER VI.—Garth sends Mokoman to McDonald with a message of defiance, and the war is on.

The self-possession of Achille fell from him like a leaf from a tree. "You sen' heem dere?" he demanded excitedly.

Etienne was relieved. He had pierced the armor of his friend—was at last making progress.

Amazed and delighted at the resource of his head man and wondering where his astounding imagination would further lead him, Garth watched the changing expression on the dark features of Achille.

"Ah-hah!" casually assented Etienne. "We know dis McDonal' Ha! Ha! mak' bad medicine an' de pore Injun who go to bees boat nevaire love dere familee any more, but travel far away and leave dem to starve—"

"Ahuah! ahuah!" wailed the terrified squaw, and launched in Cree a delirious outburst of entreaty and appeal.

Achille's attempts to sooth her hysterics succeeded only in increasing the lamentations of the superstitious woman. At length she calmed to a low moaning, which was joined by the wailing of the awakened children.

Under cover of the dusk of the tipi, sinewy fingers gripped Guthrie's stockinged foot. With the skill of a sorcerer, Etienne had planted the seeds of superstitious terror in the tipi of his friend. The work of Saul and Mokoman was rapidly being undone by the shrewd Savanne. Then voices outside announced the coming of the hunters from the neighboring tipis. Crowding through the doorflap of the snow-banked tent, three Indians from the Kapiskau river entered and sat down.

The fire was freshened and briefly Achille explained the situation which had aroused the fears of his wife. With the faces of stoics the men smoked, while the story of Etienne was repeated, but when they heard that Mokoman had been brought to the island with Saul because of the witchcraft of McDonald, they, too, lost their gravity and their calm. For that this mutilated stranger should be the intimate and crony of the spirits of darkness was not beyond the credulity of the impressionable Cree. And did not Achille vouch for this Savanne, his old comrade, from Elkwan? It was true, they argued, the big man with the unspeakable face offered high prices for fox pelts, but if he were in league with devils—as he might be with that leer, which never died—of what use would be the trade goods he bartered to those who left the ship mad with the medicine. And now that the women knew, there would be no peace. Still, Souci would know, and tell them. They would go to Souci, the shaman, who, camped with his sons over the big barrens to the north. So it was left; and two gratified men from Elkwan rolled into their blankets in the tipi of Achille Laguerre.

CHAPTER VIII

The stars pierced the blue dusk forerunner of the stinging dawn when a dog-team pulled out of the black spruce and dwarf tamarack rimming the headwater ponds of the Ptarmigan and followed a trap-line trail up into the tundra which billowed away to the wind-whipped backbone of the island. On they hurried, the team and the wide-ranging Shot, for somewhere in the valleys of the Rabbit or the Canoe, Mokoman and the renegade Souci were seducing the hunters from Elkwan. And Christmas was but six days away—Christmas, with teams from the three winds drifting down the valley into Elkwan for the trade and the feast at New Year's.

There was little time to be lost if they were to win the hunters of Akimiski and lead them across the strait. So the five dogs took the uphill work at a trot, while the men trailed the sled.

In the middle of the morning the men left the trap-line and breaking trail ahead of the dogs, slowly climbed the last rise of the barrens. In places the lack of snow on the brittle heath made the work of the dogs heartbreaking. While the flat toboggan slid over the frozen tundra, the huskies, seeking a footing, constantly broke through. Shortly, their bleeding feet forced a stop while moccasins were lashed to their legs. But at last, panting dogs and men stood on the roof of the island.

Through the glasses Garth made out the white delta of the Elkwan, and his thoughts drifted to two women who had once shared his quarters there—two women who did not shrink at scars.

But it was bitter cold on the open ridge and the dog-team turned down, seeking the valley of the Rabbit, masked by intervening hills. Over the tundra the snowshoes packed the trail for the sliding toboggan, while the dogs ran, where the hard snow on the heath gave them footing, and slaved, where they broke through the low bushes of the brushed barren when they threw their weight into their collars.

As the day advanced, the frost strengthened. A veil of haze slowly curtained the low-swinging sun, and the dog-team hurried on, for the night would fall in early afternoon, and to be caught on the high tundra by a wind meant swift freezing.

Still before them the endless hill lifted to the horizon with no indication of the break of a low valley where timber would give them shelter and a cooking fire. At noon it was evident that Etienne was worried. Never before had Garth seen his head man use the whip on his dogs as he used it that day; never in their journeys had the fur-lined hood, circled with ice and rime, turned so often while the slit-like eyes of the half-breed consulted the horizon.

"It can't be far now," said Garth. "We've surely made the twenty miles. The Rabbit must head over that hill."

"Eef we don't get off dees high countree before de win' blow, we nevaire get off," was the quiet rejoinder.

"It's colder, already." And Garth took in the belt of his parka.

"De dog weel not travel mooch more. Dere feet are cut to pieces on dis frozen bush."

On up the next ascent the limping dogs, with breath trailing behind like ribbons of smoke, followed the trail breakers. Gaining the backbone of the ridge, the men stood with startled eyes looking north. Instead of the wide basin of the Rabbit headwaters with its scrub-fringed lakes, they looked across a treeless barren.

"Those Indians lied."

"No," objected the half-breed. "We travel ver' slow. Eeet ees ovair dere." And he pointed to the far ridge.

"It will be dark when we hit it."

"One hour more light and de win' rise," muttered Savanne as he patted Castor, who lay at his feet, his steaming red tongue hanging from a mouth hung with ice. "You ver' tired, Castor? You mak dat ridge?"

The powerful leader got to his sore feet and whined as if he understood, but the listless team lay sprawled on the trail.

"It's come," announced Garth, as a curtain of snow drifted in from the northeast.

"We go! Up, mes enfants! Allons! Marche, Castor!"

An hour later, five dogs sheathed in white, plodding slowly behind two ghostlike shapes, reached the rim of the basin of the Rabbit headwaters. Dimly below them, through the pall of snow and gathering dusk, the men traced the scrub edging the lakes with shadow. As they stood in the rising wind as the dogs rested, night shut down, wiping from their eyes the goal they sought, as a sponge wipes clean a slate.

"If he follows you back, Bull," continued Selwood carelessly, "come as far as the door with him. Keep out of the shop here till the smoke settles."

Bull nodded. "I understand."

"If you know what's good for your hide, Bull," interposed Barbanet, "don't take any talk like that to Cliff Starbuck. Don't play traitor to Starbuck. He'll kill you—or I will."

"Why, Harry," said Bull Page, asserting what manhood Barbanet's whisky had left him—and though his deep, throaty voice shook, there was no hesitation, no fear in his utterance—"what do you think you're talking about? Do you think I'm afraid of you—or your kind? What have you ever done for me but fill me with poison when I come to town with money from the mines, you snake!" exclaimed Bull, gathering force with his invective. "Where did I go for a grub stake when I was hungry? To John Selwood!"

"Oh, shut up, Bull," blurted out Selwood. "Get out! And get back here quick with that key or with Starbuck."

"I'm flyin' right now, John. Do you know what this rat asked me to do a few minutes ago? To knock old man Fyler on the head and throw him in the river—that's all."

With this parting shot, Bull was opening the door through which they had come in. Barbanet saw the jig was up. "Hold on," he said, bitterly sulky, "call off your rabbit. That key will unlock either door."

Bull lost no time in starting for the inner door. "Stop a minute, Bull," interposed Selwood; "take those aprons on that chair to tie this fellow up with before you open the door. Got 'em? Now put out lights and un' c."

Page threw the back door open. Light streamed into the barber-shop from a lamp set on an up-ended barrel in the apparently empty room. Silence greeted the opening. Selwood pushed his sullen prisoner forward across the threshold. A suppressed cry acknowledged the sight of him. "Harry Barbanet!" exclaimed an unsteady voice. "What do you mean by keeping us locked here all this time? You promised we should be free in a few minutes. When are we to get out?"

Margaret Hyde stood to the left of the doorway; and clinging with clasped hands to Margaret's arm, hatless and shrinking under a cape, her eyes filled with fear, Selwood saw Christie Fyler.

Christie's startled glance fell on him. Of all men, she would have wished to identify Selwood last, despite what had passed between them, with these detestable surroundings in which she was held prisoner. To see him suddenly in this forbidding place in company with the ruthless tool of the man she had now so much reason to fear, was like rudely stripping her of what faith she had left in men. It was hardly a moment before the situation cleared, but for Christie it was a painful moment.

Barbanet halted before Margaret's question. He nodded coolly back over his shoulder. "I ain't bossing this procession." He spoke with a contemptuous spite. "This man with the gun is running things—for a few minutes—talk to him."

Barbanet's words directed all eyes on Selwood. He spoke to Margaret Hyde. "If you are kept here against your wills, you're free to go now—or will be in a minute. This is a good place to get away from. It will be burned before daylight."

"They dragged us here," exclaimed Christie. "They threatened to kill us."

"Who is 'they'?" asked Selwood.

Margaret hesitated. "All of these men," interposed Christie, tremulous and eager. She pointed to Barbanet. "This man, and most of all—Starbuck. It was he who had us brought to this vile place," repeated Christie, with gathering anger and courage. "We don't know yet why we should be locked up in this way. Who are all these men we hear in the next room? That man"—she pointed her finger, with flashing eyes, at Barbanet—"and another tried to drag me here, alone. Margaret wouldn't let them—they almost tried to kill my father!"

Selwood stood the sullen bartender facing the wall with his hands up. "I'll have a job for you in a minute, Barbanet," said Selwood in an undertone. "You may want to save your own skin with it. When these people get out of here, you can take word in to Starbuck he's cornered. Lefever's men have surrounded this place, and they're out to get him and his crew for burning their bunk-house. Starbuck can either fight, or come out and talk. If he fights, there won't be any talk—not so far as I know. If he doesn't come out he'll be burnt out. If he fights, he—and the rest of you—will get the rope."

He turned away without waiting for an answer. Bull Page had unbarred and knocked the rim lock off the flimsy back door, and opened it. Pardaloe, waiting impatiently in the dark, and itching to train the big shotgun on somebody, loomed up in the doorway.

"They're here," he said to Selwood significantly. He looked enviously at Selwood's victim, standing with his face to the wall—he offered so tempting a cushion for a handful of buckshot—but was appeased when Selwood seriously put on him the responsibility of taking the three refugees through the burnt district to the barn.

Christie, listening eagerly to all the words passed, edged up so she could ask Selwood a question apart. "You are not coming?"

He hesitated as she spoke, and looked at her almost curiously. The old fever in his blood rose at the sight of her. But pride ruled his will and Christie, looking questioningly up at him as if he, too, longed to say and to hear more, saw nothing of what was hidden behind the unbending expression. "Not yet," was all he said when he answered. "But you oughtn't to lose a minute—follow Pardaloe and keep close to him."

Pardaloe himself seemed in haste. "Don't lose no time, Christie," he urged; "come along!"

She could not be hurried. "Then surely," she faltered to Selwood, "I shall see you again tonight—to—to say something—to thank you for—"

Selwood held on to his words as if they were diamonds. "Glad to do it," he murmured, stubbornly laconic.

His gaze was so steady that her eyes fell. However, she would not give up—and when she looked at him again her eyes were glistening a little. "I know I hurt you terribly," she began. He offered nothing to help her out. "I did not want to," she persisted, resolved to soften him. "Can't you—come with us now?"

It was his turn to squirm. He did not risk his eyes directly on hers—only repeated, almost mechanically, "Not yet."

"Are you going to—to fight?" She could hardly breathe the hateful word between her reluctant lips.

"I may have to." Without looking at her, he raised his hand toward the open door. "Follow Pardaloe."

She made her last appeal—save, perhaps, that deepest appeal that until now had lain unspoken in her eyes. But Christie could say things, too. As she stepped toward the door her eyes flashed back at him. "If I didn't fear endangering your life—I'd stay anyway!"

The suddenness, the surprise, the intimate defiance, brought the carefree old laugh for a moment to Selwood's lips—the laugh of the summer auction days, the laugh that Christie remembered and had missed so long. But without giving him time for a word she stepped out into the night. It was not till then that he imagined he heard in the darkness something like a suppressed sob.

With Christie on the way to safety and Lefever's men at his call, Selwood started Barbanet back to Starbuck.

But Barbanet had only disappeared when Selwood heard a woman's scream. Christie had but just crossed the other threshold—it was her voice.

He sprang out of the open back door and ran around to the front. In the street, lighted by the gray gleam of daybreak, he saw a little group of struggling figures. To his left, out of the wide-open doors of Bartoe's place, Starbuck's men were crowding. What Selwood feared had happened: a door guard, freeing himself, had given the alarm. As they ran out they were met with the gun-fire of Lefever's men, and in what seemed no more than a second the two parties were at grips with clubs and guns.

Before Selwood could dash across the sidewalk, the group in the street was surrounded by a crowd of yelling men. In the thick of it Selwood made out Pardaloe, whirling about like a bear and furiously shaking off a man who clung to his back; a second man, gun in hand, jumped around the two, evidently trying to shoot the mule bose without hitting his assailant; Christie, screaming, her father, and Bull Page urging her away, stood by, wringing her hands. And at that moment an active man, dashing out of Bartoe's and brandishing a revolver, ran between Christie and her protectors and caught her up with his free arm.

EVERYTHING ARRANGED FOR COMBINED CELEBRATION AND HOMECOMING TODAY

Prospects Good For Biggest Crowd Ever

Eagle Grove Band Backs Out And Clarion Band Secured To Give Day's Concerts

HOMECOMING STARTS 5:15

Everything is set for the combined Legion Celebration and Homecoming program today, and indications are that Belmond will entertain the largest crowd the town has seen for many years. With the most varied program that has ever been arranged, there will be something doing throughout the entire day.

The program as announced is expected to be carried through. One change has been made, that of the band. After accepting the engagement for the day, the Eagle Grove band later notified the Legion they would be unable to come, and the Clarion band was secured for the day. Clarion has an excellent band and will give visitors some splendid concerts.

Beginning at 9 a. m., the Legion program commences with a concert, followed by $25 in checks dropped from the air for the children. This money is for the children, not the grown-ups, and it is hoped the older people will let them have the fun of catching it. From that on, foot races, tug of war, free acts, contests, horseshoe pitching, throwing contests, ball game, dancing and many other amusements and attractions will crowd the time to the utmost. A variety of concessions and attractions, rides and stands will be on hand.

Beginning at 5:15, the Homecoming program in the city park will be the feature of the day. A reception committee will be at the park all afternoon to welcome visitors, and all who wish will find accommodations there where they may meet old friends and talk over old times. At 5:30, a picnic supper will be served in the park.

Anyone who is not a member of the Community Club and has not been solicited to join the picnic supper, is welcome to do so by bringing dishes enough for their own family, sandwiches for the family and a few extras, also enough food of the following dishes in proportion to their family: potato salad, meat loaf, baked beans, pickles, cake. The food will all be placed on tables and served cafeteria style.

After the picnic supper, a splendid program has been arranged to be held on the platform. Included in this program will be a number of musical and vocal selections, and short talks by former Belmond residents. The Nihoof orchestra will furnish some old time music.

Throughout the entire day, the program contains something of interest to anyone, and prospects are for one of the biggest and best celebrations Belmond has had for some time.

She graduated from Belmond High School, and then worked in the telephone office about a year. Then she went to Fort Dodge where she attended Tobin College four months and Fort Dodge Business College four months.

Albin Tomson Is Injured By Tree

Telephone Lineman Caught By Falling Tree South of Town

Albin Tomson received severe injuries to his back last Friday, when he was struck by a falling tree at the Thos. Cullinan farm south of Belmond.

Mr. Tomson and Otis Nelson, Belmond Telephone Co. linemen, were engaged in clearing away some brush and limbs in the roadside by the Cullinan farm, which had been piled up when the road gang working on Primary 15 had blown out some trees along the right of way. Mr. Cullnan and his son, John, were engaged in cutting down some of the trees, and one of them fell quicker than was expected. Seeing the danger, they called to Tomson and Nelson, who jumped for safety. Tomson was caught by the falling tree.

The injured man was rushed to town and given prompt attention. Altho suffering from a badly wrenched back, Albin is improving nicely and was able to sit up Tuesday. It is thought he will have a complete recovery.

Clarence recently suffered a serious accident to his right eye, and while he was at Mason City receiving treatment, his friends gathered at his farm and looked after the crop for him. It was a splendid act of kindly friendliness, and Clarence is sincerely appreciative.

County Poultry Meeting Is Held

Poultry and Pigeon Exhibition Is Held At Goldfield

A meeting of the Wright County Poultry and Pigeon association was held at the John Shoenhair residence in Eagle Grove last Thursday evening. About twenty-five enthusiastic members were present.

New officers were elected and dates set or the next show, which will be held in Goldfield on Nov. 29-30-Dec. 1-2.

The last county show, held at Eagle Grove, was one of the best ever held in Wright county and members of the association are certain the next show will be as good or even better.

The new officers are:

Pres.—Miller S. Nelson, Goldfield.
Vice Pres.—John Jepson, Goldfield.
Sec.—Geo. J. Hawkins, Goldfield.
Treasurer—A. A. Blewett, Goldfield.
Directors—H. L. Kinghorn, Dows; Mrs. Sampson, Belmond; Geo. Swanson, Eagle Grove; Raymond Thorpe, Clarion, and Frank Robertson, Woolstock.

The officers hope all who are interested in poultry or pigeons will cooperate in putting over a bigger and better show. Join the association at least. The membership fee is only one dollar.

The Wright county show this year has been officially designated as the club show of the Carneau pigeon breeders for the district comprised of nine mid-western states, which means there will be several hundred pigeons shown at Goldfield. Last year there were 225 pigeons, entered from seven states.

There were about 425 chickens exhibited last year, but this number will be greatly exceeded at the next show if all parts of the county do their part in helping the new officers.

Miss Hill will begin her training next spring.

Two Good Games Billed For Sunday

Belmond Team Meets Firemen; Goodell Plays Cartersville

In a hotly contested game, last Sunday, Belmond and Klemme played to a 6 to 6 tie when rain put a stop to the battle, at the end of the eighth inning.

Belmond had the better of the fray up to the eighth inning, leading the visitors from the north by a 6 to 3 score. In the first of the eighth, however, the Klemme sluggers got the range and began a barrage which brought in three runs, evening the count. In their half of the eighth, Belmond was unable to push across a tally, and the result stood 6 to 6 when the weather man turned on the sprinkler and stopped the fight.

In a preliminary game, Goodell won from Renwick, 5 to 1, in a well played game.

Next Sunday, July 31, another double header is billed for the local diamond. Goodell will meet Cartersville, and the Belmond town team plays the Belmond Firemen. The first game is called for 1:30 p. m.

Next Monday, August 1, the Mankato "Tigers," a colored aggregation will play Belmond on the local field. August 7, Belmond plays at Manly.

Solon Jones, One of Early Settlers, Dies

Came To Belmond In Early Day And Was One Of Early Stage Coach Drivers

FUNERAL HELD SATURDAY

Belmond citizens became shocked, Thursday, when it became known that Solon Jones, long a resident of this community, had suddenly passed away at his home here. Death was due to heart trouble. Mr. Jones had suffered a similar attack some time ago, but had seemingly recovered and the sudden demise came as a shock to everyone.

Mr. Jones was one of the old timers of Belmond, coming here in an early day. He was a man of general personality who made many friends, and played his part in the building and progress of Belmond. His passing marks the loss of one more of the pioneers of Belmond who through hard toil and privation have transformed this community from a plat of Iowa prairie to the modern community of today.

Solon J. Jones, the son of Charles L. and Lettie Jones, was born in Tiskilwa, Illinois, April 12th, 1858, and passed away at his home in Belmond July 21st 1927. When but six years of age he came to Webster City, Iowa, where he remained until 12 years old. He then moved to Belmond, where he has since made his home with the exception of eleven months spent in the south.

His education was received in the schools of Webster City and Belmond. He drove stage from Belmond to Webster City for three years and when twenty five years of age he entered business for himself, opening a restaurant in Belmond which he conducted for one year. He then chose the carpenter's trade as his field of labor.

He was married October 8, 1882, to Carrie, daughter of Nicholas and Honora Johnson. He was a member of the Catholic Church and died in the Catholic faith. May his soul rest in peace.

He leaves besides his widow, Mrs. Carrie Jones, four sons, Cecil of Belmond, Iowa; Charles of Platteville, Wisconsin; Rae of Webster City, Iowa; John of Belmond, and four grandchildren.

Funeral services were held Saturday morning, burial being in St. Francis cemetery.

MARRIAGES SHRINK IN 1926; SO DO DIVORCES

Though there were fewer marriages in Wright county in 1926 than there were in 1925, the number of divorces shrunk in a greater percentage. In 1926 there were 123 marriages; in the preceding year 127. Divorces fell from 18 in 1925 to 16 in 1926. These figures are available from reports sent out of late by the department of commerce of the federal government.

The estimated population of Iowa in 1926 was 2,423,000, and according to the state census the population in 1925 was 2,419,927. On the basis of these figures, the number of marriages per 1,000 of the population was 8.7 in 1926, as against 9.1 in 1925; and the number of divorces per 1,000 of the pupulation was 1.68 in 1926, as against 1.70 in 1925.

MR. TAX FERRET—AGAIN?

Iowa Falls Citizen: The supervisors of Hardin County have employed a firm of tax-ferrets to dig into the records of Hardin county and uncover taxes that should be paid. The chief ferret is to receive $15 per day, the assistant ferret $10 per day, and the sub-ferret $7.50 per day. Well, we hope that it does not stir up a lot of trouble in the county.

It has been a quarter of a century since Hardin county had her last round of tax-ferretism. A political and legal upheaval was the fruit of the tree at that time. The trouble was battled out in the courts and to the supreme court. The ferrets were compelled to pay back to the county some $8,000. There was a bitter upheaval in county politics and a number of savage contests were waged. It took years to get away from the trouble, so much so that we hesitate mentioning it for fear that some old animosity may be raised.

With the modern and up-to-the minute tax ferret we are not acquainted. With his more intiquated relative we have had some acquaintance. This gentleman was not satisfied with the legal stipend allowed. The real tax-dodger who keeps down his assessed valuation was perfectly immune. The retired farmer or the widow with a few thousand dollars of unlisted mortgages from which they eked out an existence were easily picked up. The fellow with untaxed securities sat by and smiled. It was a great game then. What is it now?

When people erect church buildings, it stands for an interest in the Cause. After those men and women have built their houses of worship, their presence there is at least one evidence of a continued interest in the same Cause. Our morning worship next Sunday at the usual hour, eleven o'clock.

Why not reach that Sunday school goal right now? If we do our very best next Lord's Day we shall greatly please our Superintendent, and many others too. Let it be a general forward movement next Sunday. We desire to manifest our whole hearted interest in the church life, and also feel entitled to take part in that social day to which we have long looked forward.

TODAY is the BIG DAY
AND we're writing this the DAY before so we can't say
THERE is a huge crowd in town
BECAUSE maybe it'll rain
TOMORROW—we mean today—and WE'D look funny telling about
THE Big crowd when maybe
THERE isn't any to speak of,
AND it'll probably rain tomorrow,
WE mean today, because it
GENERALLY does rain when some SPECIAL celebration is in order.
BUT we have printed news
BEFORE it happened, just taking
A chance that it would, and
WE got away with it, but we
WERE pretty certain beforehand
THAT it would happen, altho
ONCE we were worried when we TOLD about a wedding before
THE tie had been tied. If the BRIDE had changed her mind
AT the last minute or the GROOM had left her at the ALTAR we would have been in a
PRETTY pickle and you know
THOSE things do happen once
IN a while outside the movies,
BUT everything went lovely and
WE got away with it and had
THE news hot off the bat.
THERE'S only one thing more
UNCERTAIN than a woman and
ONLY one thing more changeable
THAN a woman's mind and that's
THE weather, and we can't take
A chance on that so we'll just SAY today's the big day and hope
THE sun shines and the crowd
COMES and everybody has a
GOOD time and the stands sell
LOTS of pink lemonade and
HOT dawgs and hamburger and that
Johnny wins the foot race and
MINNIE gets one of the checks,
AND the ball game doesn't turn
INTO a game of marbles and the HORSE race isn't fixed, and that
ALL the old timers will meet
EACH other and swap yarns of
THE long ago and Homecoming
WILL bring a lot of the old
TIMERS back far a visit.

AGRICULTURAL NEWS NOTES

SALUTING THE "STEER MAN"

(W. M. Rosen, Ogden, Iowa, in the "Northwestern Banker")

"The city banker loans his cash
On buildings in the air,
His borrowers with cane and spats,
Have perfumes in their hair.
And diamonds sparkle on their rings,
Their shirt fronts sparkle too,
That helps their credit, don't you know,
And really shows 'Who's who'.

"The city banker then will 'float'
Some bonds that look real good,
And try to 'float' them on to us,
But no—we've understood
Through years of living with the 'rubes'
That they are staunch and true,
And when we have some cash to loan
They always get it too.

"The country banker loans his cash,
On cattle, hogs and corn,
His borrowers wear overshoes,
Their overalls are torn.
The perfume that he bears with him,
I just want you to know,
Is of that kind that makes grass green,
And makes the tall corn grow.

"He has his perfume on his boots,
Instead of in his hair,
A little drop upon his shirt,
Serves as his diamond there,
But when he wants to feed some steers,
And wants to borrow too,
This helps his credit, don't you know,
And really shows 'Who's who'.

"The man who fattens 'white face' steers,
Is not the sort of 'guy'
The country banker mostly fears—
You know the reason why.
Those flashy clothes don't make a man,
Nor make his credit good,
A man's a man for what he does—
For what he's always stood.

"The man who from a 'scrawny' calf
Can make a nice fat steer,
Is just as big a man to us,
As they who buildings rear,
And when he 'tops the market' and
The check comes rolling back,
We're just as happy as is he,
And slap him on the back.

"So here's to all our steer men,
We wish them best of health,
With lots of gain and little shrink,
They're on their way to wealth,
The man who makes those juicy steaks,
To feed those city 'guys'
Will always find his credit good,
From now until he dies."

SIRE MAY MAKE OR BREAK HERD

Further proof that it pays to use a good sire is furnished in a new circular, number 368, "Better Cows from Better Sires" just published by the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington D. C. The new publication gives the results of a study of the influence of dairy sires in increasing or decreasing the production of daughters over their dams.

In some instances it was found that bulls sired daughters which produced 40 percent more than their dams even tho the dams were fairly high producers. In other instances when poorer sires were used on good dams, the daughters were about 40 percent inferior to their dams in production, showing that a poor sire may deteriorate a good herd.

The study of individual sires shows that some had daughters which in every case produced more butterfat than their dams. Other sires produced some daughters which excelled their dams and some which didn't. Still other sires produced daughters which in all cases produced less butterfat than their dams.

"The record of a sire's dam is a promise, but the records of a large number of high producing daughters are the fulfillment of that promise," the circular states.

In the study of the influence of 103 dairy sires being made at Iowa State College from cow testing association records, one bull has been found which has sired daughters that have produced an average of 56 percent more than their dams, under very similar conditions of feeding and management.

GETS PASTURE, HAY AND SEED

A 40 acre field of biennial white sweet clover last year on the farm of A. S. Berry of Albion, Marshall County, produced three crops—pasture, hay and seed. On it were pastured 500 heads of ewes and lambs (about 250 of each), 10 milk cows and 8 work horses.

This number of livestock, however was unable to keep more than 20 acres of the 40 pastured down, so the owner allowed a neighbor to cut five acres for hay, which yielded 15 loads of hay.

Later in the summer, Mr. Berry cut the field for seed and when threshed, cleaned and scarified, he had 308 bushels of saleable seed.

Thorough liming of the soil before seeding sweet clover is one secret of Mr. Berry's success, according to J. L. Boatman, soils extension specialist of Iowa State College. Berry spread six carloads of limestone this spring and expects eventually to have his entire farm of about 240 acres limed so that he can grow sweet clover or alfalfa on any portion of it.

Ninety five per cent of the European corn borers in the infested areas where clean-up campaigns have been waged this spring were destroyed by the campaign, according to estimates of the workers from the United States Department of Agriculture.

IRONING HINTS

An ironing pad can be purchased in the store, and you will not need to rob the bed of blankets. Cover this with the heaviest unbleached muslin you can buy. Sheeting is useful for the cover. Under the ironstand lay an old newspaper, folded. it will protect the cover of the ironing board from scorching.

One can save some labor by folding handkerchiefs in quarters only, and not in the old-time small style. Do not press the folds in the tablecloths and they will look better on the table. Fold towels, in thirds, lengthwise, that they will not have to be unfolded when hung on the towel rack.

Dresses, blouses, and shirts will look neater for wear, if they are hung on hangers in the closet and not folded away in drawers. To have all the clothes thoroughly dry before laying away, keeps them in smoother and better shape. When you lay things away in boxes or drawers, spread them out as much as possible and lay them away with precision. Careless putting away will muss a garment and undo the value of a careful ironing.

VACATION STUNT

Vacation should not only be a rest and change for the body, but also for the mind. The person who sticks too closely to his favorite line of thought will get a "one track mmd". It is refreshing to the brain worker to slump off his usual hobby and pick up an entirely new set of ideas and interests. Mingle with friends with totally different habits of thought and swap ideas with them. Focus your attention on new hobbies for the time being. Make your vacation go by "contraries", that is, do then the opposite thing from your ordinary life. Let your brain go rambling far afield from its regular routine duties for the rest of the year. You may not enjoy it so much for the time being, but you will feel the beneficial effects when you get back into the harness.

CANNING TOMATOES

Tin cans are better for canning tomatoes and many vegetables than glass jars. The tin shuts out the light, which fades these delicate products and contributes to their spoilage. Thrifty housewives can cut the winter grocery bill by canning the garden surplus.

A HOUSE

A house is a place where one performs certain simple duties in exchange for food and rest.

Do you know that Winter will be here again before we know it. Where does time go?

Among the things that are getting shorter are the coal supply, ladies' skirts, and Dad's patience.

"Well, if he pulled the other one up, he'd fall down."

And they called the baby "Bill" because he came on the first of the month.

Winter is coming. That's a certainty. And when winter comes, you're going to need coal. That's another certainty. Therefore we suggest that you get your supply before the annual rush.

A man spends a third of his life wondering what he wants, and another third in getting it, and the final third in wondering what he's going to do with it.

Boy. — "Show 'im your tooth Albert."

He who buys what he doesn't need, May later need what he cannot buy;
But he who buys what he actually needs,
Is an economical sort of guy!

"Do you handle bread?"
"Yes, sir."
"Then give me a loaf you haven't handled."

SILK HOSE

The wonder is that they wear as well as they do and cost as little as they do, though that is enough. It is said that women buy as many pairs of silk hose in one day now, as they bought in a year twenty-five years ago. But cotton hose had a faculty of wearing out. Our hosiery bill is not as much greater as one might suppose.

OBITUARY OF GOODELL WOMAN

Mrs. Anna Rust was born June 14, 1842 in Germany and died July 17, 1927, age 85 years, 1 month and 3 days. She passed her childhood, grew to womanhood and was married in Germany to Heiko Rust. Ten children were born to this union, three in the old country and seven here. The family came to America in the year 1882 and settled at Ackley, Iowa, and later moving to Goodell where they farmed for several years, then moved into town. The Rusts have lived in this vicinity for years and Grandma Rust numbered her friends by her many acquaintances. She was a loving wife, mother and faithful Christian woman and indeed a fine neighbor. She will be greatly missed by her relatives, friends and the neighborhood in which she lived.

Mr. Rust passed away several years ago She leaves to mourn the loss of a mother her ten children, Harm Rust of Goodell, George Rust of Kanawha, Mrs. Schultz of South Dakota, Mrs. Jacobs of North Dakota, Mrs. Martha Brass of Goodell, Mrs. Ellen Harberts of Goodell, Henry Rust of Lake Lillian, Minnesota, John Rust, Goodell; Hiko Rust Bridgewater, Minnesota, and Mrs. Anna Langlitz, Goodell, thirty two grandchildren and eighteen great grand children.

Mrs. Rust had been failing in health the past few months and about a month ago all her children came to see her at the same time, bringing much joy to their mother. Mrs. Rust seemed to gain a little strength and was able to be around again, so went to the home of her son Harm to spend a couple of weeks until she felt better, but she suffered a stroke of paralysis while there and God thought best and relieved her suffering, calling her to his heavenly home Sunday, July 17 at 11:30 p. m.

Funeral services were held at the U. B. church Wednesday at 2 p. m. with Rev. F. C. Scott officiating. Three beautiful songs were sung by the quartet composed of Mrs. Thada, Mrs. McNutt, Earl Clark and Harry Newgard. Messrs. Allaben, Wesenberg, Beier, Sandberg, Thada and Cunningham were pall bearers. Interment was made in the family lot in the Amsterdam cemetery. The esteem in which Mrs. Rust was held was made manifest by the beautiful floral offerings and the large crowd of friends who gathered at the church to pay the last tribute and respect. The community extends sympathy to the sorrowing relatives.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to express our sincere thanks to the many friends for the acts of kindness shown to us during the illness and death of our loving mother, also for the beautiful floral offerings.

Profitable Hog Feeding

Here are a few tables for the farmer to study who wants to make the most out of his hogs:

12 bushel Corn	$10.20	7 bushel Corn	$ 5.95
Hogs sell at	8.00	40 lbs. Tankage	1.35
Loss	$2.20	Profit	.70
5 bushel Corn	$4.25
50 lbs. SPEAR Hog Feed	1.40
Profit	$2.35

All based on cost of producing 100 lbs. of pork selling at $8.00 per 100 lbs.

We have a lot of feeders using the SPEAR Hog Feed and they all say the same thing—that it is the cheapest and the best feed that they ever used.

We have just unloaded another car. We would like to have you give it a fair trial by using one or two bags; then let us make you a price on ton or half ton lots.

We have a full line of BABY CHICK FEED, so we can take care of the late hatches.

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I.—Garth Guthrie, Canadian war veteran, having to live in the open on account of weakened lungs, is factor of a Hudson's Bay post at Elkwan. He came back from the conflict with a permanently scarred face, which he realizes cost him the love of his fiancee, Edith Falconer. Sir Charles Guthrie, his brother, is a millionaire war profiteer.

CHAPTER II.—With Etienne Savanne, halfbreed, his firm friend, Garth meets Doctor Quarrier, geologist, and his sister Joan. Their schooner has drifted ashore. Quarrier complains he has been robbed by a man known as "Laughing McDonald" or to the Indians as "McDonald Ha! Ha!" because of a scar which gives him a perpetual grin. McDonald is Garth's competitor for the fur trade. At Elkwan an Indian girl, Ninda, tuberculosis victim, whom Garth has befriended, is dying. Quarrier hints that Ninda is Garth's mistress, which is hotly resented. Joan, trained war nurse, cares for Ninda, but the girl dies.

CHAPTER III.—Garth tells Joan part of the reasons for his presence at Elkwan. He takes the Quarriers to Albany, from whence they can proceed to Montreal. Charles Guthrie writes reproaching his brother for not coming home. Charles' wife assures him Ethel still loves him, but Garth in his heart knows better. His scarred face has separated them.

CHAPTER IV.—Three of McDonald's party visit Elkwan seeking to buy gun shells. From them Garth learns of evil talk among the Indians concerning him and Ninda, and realizes Quarrier will spread his version of the affair.

CHAPTER V.—With Etienne's help Garth wins the friendship of Saul Soucl, "medicine man" and treaty chief of the Crees, and gets his promise to persuade the Crees to take their furs to Elkwan instead of to McDonald. Garth is ambushed by Joe Mokoman, Ninda's reputed father, whom the factor had driven from Elkwan. "Shot," Garth's airedale companion on many battlefields in France, saves him, and the Indian is taken, a prisoner, to Elkwan.

CHAPTER VI.—Garth sends Mokoman to McDonald with a message of defiance, and the war is on.

"I've got the compass arrection, north, northwest," said Garth.

Etienne shook his snow-crusted hood. "Keep de win' on right cheek. So long cheek froze, we head right for de timber." He turned to the dogs, white as the snow they lay on. "Marche, Castor, mon brave!" And snapping his whip, he tugged at the harnesses until the reluctant brutes got to their feet.

Facing the drive of the wind, the team fought its way slowly down over the frozen tundra. With night the frost stiffened, and the needle-pointed barrage of snow crystals stung the faces of men and dogs like the lash of myriad whips. Heads down to avoid the agony, men and dogs swung away from the thrust of the wind, until the half-breed, straightening again, felt the bleat of the blizzard on his right cheek, and changed their course.

Often, unable to face the burst of edged torment on their noses, the dogs lay down, backs to the drive, refusing to move. Then, Garth and Etienne, lifting them to their feet, dragged the team and sled until the huskies again leaned into their collars. Blindly into the murk wailing them in plunged the tireless halfbreed, leading the way to the shelter of the far timber and food. With face frostbitten from exposure in feeling for direction, hands numb from untangling with mitteniess fingers the frozen harness of the dogs, Etienne plunged down the sloping tundra. His face buried in his hood and constantly fighting to save his numbing fingers, Garth followed. There flashed through his mind tales told at the post of Crees caught, as they were, on the high barrens, and found stiff in the snow. But, as he doubled against the drive of the blizzard, blinded, unable to see the man ahead; often swinging off the trail while, holding true, the canny lead dog passed him with the team, Garth Guthrie never doubted that they would win to the timber and shelter.

Two grinding hours of slavery on lacerated feet into the pin-pointed fury, and turning in their harness, the spent dogs lay down, refusing to move. Numb to threats or urging, the heart-broken huskies, crusted with ice, had made their choice. Rather than the torture which flayed their faces, they would lie, backs to the barrage, while the withering wind slowly stiffened them to ice.

There was nothing the men could do. The dogs were done.

"I turn dem loose. We hunt de timber," Etienne shouted into Garth's hood. With his knife he slashed the dogs from their frozen harness, but the huskies lay while the snow beat over them, refusing their freedom. Shot, white-coated from nose to tail, gingerly muzzled the motionless shapes. Castor, alone, resented the act by a feeble snap. Lifting their heads, and shaking them, Garth in turn called their names, but the numbness of the white death already was in their blood. Gently he lifted Castor to his feet, but the leader sank limply to the snow.

"Good-by, boys!" he called to the white shapes by the sled. "You gave us all you had. Good-by!"

"Dey weel freeze in ten minute—nevair feel eet now," shouted Etienne, his voice breaking as he turned from a last word with his favorite Castor.

Shelter and fire! All thought of the food frozen under the sled cover had left them. The windbreak of the spruce meant fire, warmth, life—but how far was the timber? With the ax from the sled the two men started. Shot at their heels. A hundred yards and Etienne stumbled, stopped—while Garth lunged into him.

The man on his knees turned to the other. "De spruce—eet ees here!" His snowshoes had fouled a dwarf spruce on the edge of the timber. Swiftly now they plunged ahead, seeking the heavier growth. In a hundred yards they were in thick bush.

While Guthrie scraped out a firehole with a snowshoe, Etienne gathered dry spruce twigs and started a fire; then slashed down saplings and soon had a comforting heat in the snow-hole behind the wind-break.

With the Warmth the Men Rubbed the Circulation Into Numbed Hands and Faces.

With the warmth the men rubbed the circulation into numbed hands and faces. But out on the tundra in the drive of the blizzard lay five loyal friends, stiffening under the drift.

Leaving the fire Garth and Etienne started to back-track to the sled. Guthrie, with Shot alternately plunging ahead and returning to find his master, had gone but a short distance into the blackness with its shot-like hail of fine snow, when he found that he had drifted away from the halfbreed. Too dark to locate tracks in the snow which filled at once with drift, he kept on with the wind on his left shoulder. Suddenly he missed Shot. He stopped and shouted, hoping the dog was near, but the airedale was lost, or had left him. Why?

Continuing down wind, counting his paces, at last Guthrie knew that he had passed the sled in the blind murk, so circled. Etienne had said the dogs would freeze in ten minutes—and he had missed them; lost the chance to save the huskies who had given him their all that grim December day—. Then a white body shouldered into his legs—Shot!

"Where did you go?" he shouted into the dog's ear. But the excited beast left him to plunge into the storm—then returned to seize Garth's mittened hand.

Following the dog for a space, he stumbled against a mound in the snow—the sled! He groped for the heaps that marked the frozen dogs, but in vain. They were gone. Etienne? He had got them up into the spruce.

In his joy Garth knelt and hugged the ice-sheeted body of the great airedale whose tongue found his master's face.

Food!

The sled-load was untouched. Etienne had had but one thought—to save his dogs. So Garth slashed the frozen lashings and reached a grub-bag, tea pail and kettle; then started for the camp, following blindly the dog who nosed out the tracks of the team. The dull glow of the fire through the blur of snow led them over the last yards. There, on his knees, Etienne was working over his huskies' legs.

"Grub and a pail!" shouted Garth, as he scooped up snow for tea. "Good old Castor! You feel better now?"

The husky, sprawled near the blazing logs, lifted his tail in response.

"Der moccasin save der feet," said Etienne. "Good t'ing dey cut feet on de bush so we put on de shoe."

"But how did you get them up to follow you? They were close to frozen when we left them."

Etienne grinned as he pinched and rubbed a pair of hairy paws. "Do husky eeg ver' smart feller. Dey were all tire out—but not start to freeze w'en we left dem. Een leetle tam, dey so tire and hungree, dey freeze. But Etienne tell dem dat supper start soon, and dey come to life, toute suite. Den I drag dem here."

"I'll go back for blankets," said the much relieved Guthrie, and with Shot, went to the sled and returned with robes, and the whitefish for the famished huskies.

Selwood of Sleepy Cat

By FRANK H. SPEARMAN

Had the confusion been less, had the uncertain light been less certain, Selwood would have been at no loss to recognize this man; the commonest instinct in the nature of men would have declared Starbuck to him in the man assailing Christie. He did not realize that smoke was now rising about Bartoe's place, that Pardaloe had made good his threat to burn it, and that the men running out of the door were crying "Fire!" He had eyes for no one but Starbuck and heard nothing but Christie's angry, rebellious cries as she struggled to free herself. And he ran toward her with an answering cry.

Starbuck saw him leap into the street; and, still holding the frantic girl, he brought down his gun like a flash on Selwood.

It was a reckless, a useless shot. With Christie fighting him with her puny fists, the bullet flew wide. Not deigning to reply, not even drawing his own gun, but maddened to fury, Selwood dashed forward; before Starbuck could pull up and cover the second time, the gambler was on him. Bull Page had caught Christie by the wrist and was dragging her away. She screamed at Bull and resisted him. She tried to get back to where she knew a deadly moment had come between the man she hated and the man she loved; but she could not.

Pardaloe, like a beleaguered giant, had shaken off his enemies, recovered his shotgun, and above the sputtering crack of revolvers, its roar sounded on Christie's ears. Then, clubbing the gun and shouting imprecations at his enemies, the mule boss swept an open space between them and the two men who, locked in a death struggle, rolled in the middle of the street.

Despite a terrific blow across the head from the flat of Selwood's revolver, Starbuck's weight and bulk had borne the gambler to the ground; and Starbuck, to avoid a fatal dexterity with the same revolver, had clinched with him.

Neither of the infuriated men—seasoned to death grips—wasted another instant trying to shoot. But Starbuck had a further resource lacking to his enemy. Selwood knew precisely what it was—the deadliest of weapons in a clinch. He knew as grips, like lightning, shifted, eyes strained in fury, blows rained remorselessly, and the gage of life and death slipped from hand to hand, precisely what Starbuck was trying to do—he knew almost precisely where the heavier man carried the coveted weapon, and now not one man but two were exhausting every resource of strength and stratagem to reach the haft of Starbuck's bowie-knife at his hip.

It was an unequal struggle. Starbuck's weight and strength almost continually overbore the gambler's agility. Each advantage for the mastery hard-gained by Selwood was soon lost to the heavier defense of Starbuck. With Pardaloe's piercing eyes taking note of every turn, he could see but one hope for the lighter man, a hope that vanished when Selwood seemed weakening. If Starbuck's wind should outlast the other—Selwood, Pardaloe told himself, could not win.

So deep had become this conviction that more than once Pardaloe would have interfered, would have knocked Starbuck on the head or rammed him with his gun-stock—would have taken for himself the badge of disgrace from the wrought-up teamsters, watching—had he not known that Selwood, living or dead, would never forgive a stigma put on him by the aid of a friend. With hungry eyes and ears, the powerful mule boss watched the doubtful issue and listened to the sharp, broken breaths of the struggling men. But again and again Starbuck would roll his enemy under, only to have Selwood squirm free and slip himself out.

The contest fast narrowed to one point—the possession of the knife. Pardaloe saw and he understood; his fingers itched and his muscles twitched in his fever to pass his own knife into Selwood's hand; and almost as if timed to the last moment of the encounter, Starbuck, once more freeing his right hand, restrained till then by Selwood's left, slipped it from the leash of muscles, and whipped out his knife.

But in gaining this deadly advantage he had laid himself open to an unlooked-for danger. As a boxer, defeated in every tactic of defense, sees himself going and turns to the attack, Selwood's right hand, releasing Starbuck's left, shot out and clutched Starbuck's windpipe. The sinewy fingers closed relentlessly on Starbuck's throat, and, squirming from under him, Selwood threw himself across his enemy and overlay the arm slashing at him with the knife. Pardaloe, wild with anxiety, knew the end was in sight. But could Starbuck inflict a fatal injury before he should succumb to the grip that had cut off his breath?

Throwing himself frantically about as he felt consciousness going, striking blindly at Selwood from the forearm, Starbuck tried to land a fatal thrust. But Selwood, as Starbuck, plunging and rearing, slammed him from side to side to shake loose the deadly grip, took the slashing as best he could, clinging all the while like a panther at the throat of his foe.

Above the din about him, Pardaloe shouted and yelled. Hope had returned. He saw how the fight went. And, stamping his clumsy feet in a frenzy, he watched Selwood's left elbow gradually straighten and saw his left hand slide slowly, unevenly, but certainly up to Starbuck's right wrist. Again the two men meshed. Pardaloe could see their straining muscles shiver in a climax of struggle. Then, Selwood had wrested the haft of the knife from his strangled foe, let go his throat, and raised his arm to strike.

Not till then did Pardaloe jump in. He caught the uplifted arm. The gambler, covered with blood, looked angrily up. "Not yet, John," cried the big fellow, low and ferociously. "Hang him!"

Panting as if dazed, Selwood looked again to see who spoke. The voice that entered his ear sent no message to his brain. He shook away the matted hair that fell before his eyes. Pardaloe, gripping his arm, looked intently at him and repeated his words. Whether Selwood understood or not, he knew Pardaloe. He looked down on his gasping enemy, and, stretching out his left hand, laid the ugly knife in Pardaloe's hand.

With a cracked laugh, he staggered to his feet, groping about with his hands for support.

Pardaloe steadied him. "Cut much, John?" he asked, bending anxiously over him.

"Why—no." Trying to pull himself together, Selwood panted the words. "I guess—not."

"You're chipped a little," commented Pardaloe, taking hold of his blood-soaked left arm and peering with melancholy sympathy into the strained eyes.

With the fingers of his left hand, Selwood felt uncertainly around his heart. "One jab," he said, breathing hard, "I thought went through me. His grip must have slipped," he added, as his fingers ran vacantly over his chest, trying to find a particular spot, "or something—turned the knife. What's here, Bill?" he asked, feeling blindly at the slit breast-pocket of his woolen shirt.

Pardaloe set down his lantern, and, using both hands on the slashed pocket, succeeded in fishing out the remains of a pack of cards. He stooped to examine the cards by the light of the lantern; the point of Starbuck's knife had gone half way through them. "My cards, by gum!" exclaimed Pardaloe, as his face fell. "Plum' cut to pieces, too. That deck ain't worth shucks to nobody now—look at 'em!" He held the pack up for inspection and looked indignantly down at Starbuck, whose wrists and ankles were already bound by Lefever and Scott. "No matter, old boy," he growled; "we'll fix you in a minute so you won't cut up no more cards for nobody."

Such of Starbuck's following as could escape the clutches of Lefever's angry men were scattering in the thickets along the river, where most of them had horses hidden, and by fording or swimming the stream could spur out on the Sinks for Calabasas.

Smoke was billowing from the doors and windows of Bartoe's place. Flames were lighting for the last time the interior of the empty barroom and licking its evil trappings. Selwood, steadied by Pardaloe, looked blankly at the scene before him and backed away.

The teamsters were dragging off their prisoners. In the crowd that closed in on the scene there rose up sudden bosses, and a confusion of orders as to how Starbuck should be disposed of. In the midst of the shouting, jostling throng, Selwood stood once more clear-headed. When a cry arose to run Starbuck to a telegraph pole, he intervened. "Hands off," he said. "This man is my prisoner. Take him to the barn, Pardaloe, with the others—and hold him till I get there."

CHAPTER XV

The Padre.

Torn by anxiety and racked with fears, Christie hovered as long as she could on the edge of things. But poor Bull Page, with more sense of the fitness of things than should be expected, refused her entreaties that she be allowed to see Selwood. "You two," he suggested to Christie and Margaret, when with Fyler they reached the hotel, "get into the kitchen and get some coffee going for the bunk-house boys. If they hadn't got out when they did, there wouldn't be any hotel now. Them fellows sent word to Carpy that if he didn't come down to Bartoe's to look after their wounded men, they'd burn the hotel on him; he told 'em—well, to burn and be hanged."

Selwood walked to the hotel. He had hardly thrown himself on his bed when Carpy's boisterous tread could be heard on the stairs, and the next minute Selwood was in the hands of the rough, cheerful surgeon—most cheerful now, for the night skies had cleared, and cleared his way.

GEORGE PARKS, ALIAS "BLACKIE", IS CAUGHT BY OFFICERS AT CELEBRATION

Imbibes Own Hootch And Gets Caught

Well Known Belmond Character Taken In Tow By Officer At Galt Celebration

GETS 30 DAYS, $600 FINE

Seldom does a bootlegger become intoxicated by drinking his own wares, but such a case came to light at the Galt booster day celebration when George Parks, alias "Blackie" of Belmond was found in an intoxicated condition. He was taken in tow by John Chandler, special policeman, and his assistants and later brought to Clarion by Chandler and Deputy Leonard. Attorney Blue and Sheriff Johnson took charge of the case and Parks entered a plea of guilty in Justice Trigg's court on Thursday and was sentenced to thirty days in the county jail. He also admitted driving a car while intoxicated and for this offense was bound over to the grand jury. Officers have known that Blackie was carrying on a prosperous bootlegging business in and around Belmond for more than a year past, but were unable to secure sufficient evidence to convict him. This last condition existed chiefly from the fact that no cooperation could be depended upon by the sheriff's office from the Belmond police, two of whom have been found in an intoxicated condition and given up their star within a comparatively short time. When Blackie was searched the sum of $226 in currency was found in his sock.

After thinking the matter over for a few hours "Blackie" decided he wanted the whole matter settled. Hence at his request he was taken before Judge Garfield at Ames, where he pleaded guilty to driving an auto while intoxicated. His fine was fixed at $600, which he hopes to pay.—Monitor.

Raymond Rasmussen of Goldfield was arrested Sunday at Eagle Grove for driving a car while intoxicated. He was brought before Justice Triggs at Clarion and was bound over to the grand jury, his bond being fixed at $1,000, in default of which he was sent to jail. Marshal Clarke of Goldfield attempted to arrest Rasmssen and two companions, Jack Butts and Jackie Johnson, when they gave him the slip and drove to Eagle Grove. The officer followed them and with the assistance of Marshal Reynolds located the trio and placed them under arrest. His companions entered a plea of guilty of intoxication before the mayor of Goldfield and were fined $10 and costs.

W. E. Mann, proprietor of Mann's Corner store at Eagle Grove, brings action against Minnie Walters to collect the sum of $247.88, alleged to be due on account of merchandise sold and delivered to the plaintiff.

Wm. Weinhold of Eagle Grove alleges that on June 9th, 1924, he signed a joint promissory note with C. E. Wandby and on maturity was compelled to pay the same that defendant has never repaid him and that he is about to dispose of his property for the purpose of defrauding his creditors. On these grounds a writ of attachment is asked in the sum of $1194.37.

The Duffy Trowbridge Stove Mfg. Co. vs W. W. Frakes of Eagle Grove is a suit to collect $143.00 on account.

Alfred and Emma Lewis confess judgment in favor of A. O. Clave in the sum of $1382.60 for the purpose of securing a new loan.

The Citizens State bank of Eagle Grove, through its receiver L. A. Andrew, brings action against Edith and H. R. Norris to recover $1175.80 on their promissory note.

Cyril Woodson of Eagle Grove declares in his petition filed in district court that his wife, Mary Woodson, has been guilty of cruel and inhuman treatment and for that reason asks a divorce.—Monitor.

JAMES CANNON DIES

James Cannon, a former resident of Belmond, died at the hospital in Petaluna, Calif., yesterday, Wednesday, following an operation. He had gone to the hospital but a few days previous, following a short illness. Details concerning his death are not available at this writing. He will be buried in Petaluna.

Mr. Cannon was a resident of Belmond for many years, residing on a farm east of town. He with his daughter, Nina, and son, Clem, moved to California about a year ago.

GERTRUDE MABEL SHURSON

Gertrude Mabel Shurson was born at Clarion, Iowa, January 23, 1891, and died July 28, 1927, at St. Luke's hospital, Cedar Rapids, Iowa, after an illness of five weeks. She was at the time of her death, 36 years, 6 months and 5 days of age. Deceased is survived by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Skouge of San Diego, California; a sister, Mrs. Alfred Guy of Tama, Iowa, and a brother, Arthur Skouge, of Clarion, Iowa, all of whom were present at the funeral.

Funeral services were held at the home of Arthur Skouge, at 1 o'clock and at St. Olaf church, Sunday, at 2 p. m. Burial was in the St. Olaf cemetery. The esteem in which she was held was evidenced by the large number of mourners, and the display of floral tokens. Over 500 persons were present at the church.

KLEMME CROPS HIT BY HAIL

Hail practically wiped out crops of grain and corn on several farms south and east of Klemme Sunday. The farms suffering the heaviest loss are the A. R. White farm, Lippo Blank's farm, Albert Johnson farm, Charles Fritzell farm, U. G. Smid farm and Albert Barz farm. Other near by farms also were hit by the severe hail storm but did not suffer a great loss. Crops, or portions of crops on the places mentioned are practically wiped out. Samples of oats brought in from Fritzell's place was beaten by the hail to such an extent that it looked like it had been run through a threshing machine. The corn on these farms was badly stripped of leaves. Other nearby farms show evidence of the hail by the stripped appearance of the corn.—Times.

Sugar Plant To Be Sold Today

U. S. Marshall Will Sell Mill At 10 a. m. At Ft. Dodge

The Iowa Valley Sugar Company plant in Belmond will be sold by the United States Marshal at 10 o'clock this morning, at his office in Fort Dodge, to satisfy a mortgage held by the Union Trust Co., of Cleveland, O., acting as trustees for the first mortgage bond holders.

Conjecture as to whom the purchaser will be has been rife for the past month, and there are rumors that a surprise may possibly be sprung at the sale today. Speculation as to the possibility of the plant operating next year has been the topic of much conversation in Belmond, the universal hope being entertained that the mill may be run.

Under a stipulation in the sale, the Union Trust Co. has the right to signify their intention of operating the plant in 1928, up to Dec. 15, 1927. The Central Trust Co. of Illinois, trustees of the second mortgage bond holders, have until Jan. 1, 1928, to so signify providing the Union Trust Co. does not. If neither of these companies so signify, providing one or the other purchase the plant today, then the sugar company has the right to operate the mill next season.

Firemen Extinguish Town Team's Fire

Con Nissen Almost Becomes Prostrated By Heat

The Belmond firemen squelched the blaze stirred up by the Belmond town team, Sunday, out on the ball field, with a 13 to 9 score. It was a hot fire while it lasted, and no mistake. Con Nissen, who seemed to be acting as fire chief, had his company in pretty good trim, and they mistreated shamefully the friendly offerings served up by Studebaker and Johnson who acted as reception committees for the town boys. Con became overheated several times, but cooled down before anything serious developed.

The town team, being a friendly bunch, let the firemen have most of their players to begin with, so that the firemen really had more of a town team than the town team had. We know they'll roar about this, but we're reporting facts just the same. The city guys tallied the first run, thereby demonstrating to Rich Thompson the foolishness of betting on ball games. This seemed to make the firemen somewhat peeved, for they came right back and went ahead and never fell behind again. After abusing the offerings of the town team's pitchers until the count was 13-5, the firemen decided they had enough, and took it easy until the last of the seventh, the final inning, when for a time the fire flamed up fiercely as the town team shot a barrage of hits from "Barney" Dillon's slants. When the last spark had been crushed out, the result was 13-9, and Con Nissen's flame eaters were sweating from every pore and fought fiercely the demand on the part of the fans for a full regulation nine innings. Enough was sufficient, and so it remained. But what might have been in two more innings furnishes as much food for argument as that poke in the tummy which sunk the sailor.

In the second game, Goodell versus Cartersville, the final result is still a question, no two stories agreeing. It doesn't make much difference anyway, Goodell was so far superior to the Cartersville aggregation that it wasn't a ball game, it was an Indian massacre. After scoring nine runs the first inning, Goodell put in their time the balance of the game, occasionally wandering around the circuit for another run or two to vary the monotony of batting. The final count was around 16 to 0, or something like that. That Goodell nine is a speedy bunch, and if Cartersville had had a ball team the fans would have seen a game.

HAMPTON GAS PLANT BURNS

Fire practically destroyed the gas plant at Hampton, owned by the Iowa Public Service Co., last week, causing a loss of $20,000. The blaze originated on the roof of the building, from a spark, and was first discovered by trainmen. Practically all equipment is a complete loss.

Mr. and Mrs. E. F. Bailey were called to Ackley, Tuesday evening, when their little granddaughter, Rosemary Schwinger, severely burned one arm on an oil stove.

Well filled barns, buildings overflowing with exhibits, educational features and a program in front of the grandstand that is unexcelled anywhere, are in store for visitors at the North Iowa Fair when the gates are opened to the public on August 14 for the twenty-first annual exposition.

The program opens Sunday afternoon with a sacred band concert by McDonald's Scotch Highlanders and continues for five days, afternoon and evening, closing on Friday, August 19 with the fireworks program.

Auto races on Monday, August 15 and Thursday, August 18, will offer the thrilling days on the program. Two Farmers' races are scheduled for this day with purses aggregating $75.00 to be paid the winners.

Circus acts and other thrilling features will fill in between the races and include the Fearless Greggs with their Autos that pass in the Air who twice daily will risk their lives in a sensational performance.

The Mammoth scenic fireworks fireworks spectacle "Our Nations Glory" will be presented five nights beginning August 15, and will show in pageant and tableau the growth of the nation with revue ballet and circus acts filling in the intervals between.

Former Coach to North Dakota

The following item from the Oskaloosa Herald will be of interest to many Belmond people:

"Glen E. Whitlock, who taught and coached in the high school at Kanawha, Iowa, last year, has accepted the position of physical director at Fargo, North Dakota, for the coming school year. Mr. and Mrs. Whitlock expect to leave Oskaloosa where they have been spending the summer, about August 15. They will enjoy a few day's vacation trip in Minneapolis, Minn., before going to North Dakota to take up school duties."

The birth of two sets of twin calves is reported this week at the Henry Polmateer farm. If we can't get legislation for the farmer, maybe nature will take a hand.—Renwick Times.

Celebration Goes Thru As Planned

Program and Homecoming Give Large Crowd Entertainment Throughout The Day

CLARION WINS FROM DOWS

Belmond's "Big Day", the Combined Legion celebration and Homecoming, held last Thursday, went through practically as planned. The day was bright and clear, and early in the forenoon the crowd began coming in. With the Clarion band starting the program at 9:30 with a concert, the Legion program of events got under way and something was doing every minute of the day from then on.

The street sports, tug of war, and contests as billed were carried through in the forenoon. The free act by the Five Marriotts was pronounced one of the best ever exhibited in the town, and created quite a sensation.

In the afternoon, the horse races and ball game were the main attractions. Edgar Mantle, of Rowan, took the horse race, and in a hard-fought game, Clarion won from Dows, 4 to 3.

At 5 o'clock, the Homecoming program began in the city park with the picnic supper. As usual there was a large Homecoming crowd present, and all enjoyed the picnic supper. At 7 p. m., a program as outlined last week, was given on the platform in the park. This program was shortened somewhat by the absence of several of the speakers, who were unable to be home for the occasion.

After the Homecoming program, a free act, battle royal and dancing concluded the day's events. Throughout the day, a "midway" of concessions and stands in the Bank block were going full blast. No trouble of any nature was experienced throughout the day with the exception of one concession man, who was found cheating and who, after being warned, was jailed. The crowd, which by night, had grown to huge proportions, was quiet and orderly, and no drunks were in evidence. It was one of the best, most orderly celebrations the town has enjoyed for a long time.

After paying expenses of the day, the Legion will have a substantial amount left. No record was kept of the winners in the various sports events and races during the day, consequently The Independent is unable to give the names of the winners.

Editorials

The "Big Day" has come and gone, and doubtless opinion is as divided as ever as to whether celebrations of this character are worth while or not. Judging from the opinions expressed in the questionnaires sent out a few weeks ago by The Independent, the majority favor such a celebration. Of the replies received, the vote was five to one in favor. As one business man expressed it, "The town owes its trade customers one celebration a year." Another thought such days were a good thing, in that they advertised the town, kept it before the people of this territory, and were in the nature of a treat to trade customers. Probably, all things considered, a "big day" of this character is worth while. Other towns hold them, and the people of the community more or less expect something of the kind in the way of a good time. Such celebrations, however, involve a lot of hard work, and in having the Legion take charge of the day, Belmond may consider itself lucky. Probably the Legion will come out ahead a few dollars—we hope they do—but if one were to take into consideration the immense amount of labor and time which the Legion boys donated, and were to figure this time and work at going wages, the organization would be in the hole financially. No one will begrudge the Legion men their gain, if they have one; they earned it, and earned it with hard work; and if the Legion had not taken hold, we all know we would not have had a celebration.

The action of the Town Council is placing the Nightwatch's salary at $100 a month, payable by the town, will meet with universal approval. That is the proper method of reimbursing this official. The method used heretofore, $25 a month from the town and the balance of the officer's monthly stipend by donations from the various business places, was unsatisfactory and unsound in principle. No city official should be dependent upon private subscription for his pay. With that method there are too many bosses, too many toes which have to be watched carefully for fear of being stepped upon. The nightwatchman should be paid by the city, and responsible only to his superiors in the city government.

President Coolidge's unexpected declaration yesterday that he would not be a candidate for president in 1928 left the country gasping. The usual line of "I told you so's" from both sides of the political fence will now be forthcoming. Like Ford's apology to the Jews, the president's statement will have to be accepted at face value, and each one permitmited his own ideas and conjectures as to the reason why. Coolidge, if nothing else, is an astute politician. He can tell, as well as the next man, which way the wind blows. It is the opinion of this paper that Coolidge had the third term idea in mind, when he came West. He received a cordial welcome here, but found that welcome was simply the courtesy of the host to a distinguished guest, and that the Middle West was not changing its mind. No president gives a public interview, or makes a public declaration, without first giving consideration to every angle of it and particularly to the phrasing he uses. We call attention to the President's statement regarding his candidacy. He did not say "I will not be a candidate," he said: "I do not CHOOSE to be a candidate." Sometimes there is a world of meaning in one word.

TAKING THE CHILDREN ON A TRIP

It is not an easy task to travel with small children, but many a young mother must pay that price to get home to see Mother. It is easier to make the journey in the night time, for then the children will sleep most of the way and will not be worn out nor wear their mother out. Quite frequently one sees a young mother starting out, of an evening, to make a long journey with little children. It is a brave enterprise. Many things can be done to make the trip less of a strain.

Dress the children in dark clothing. They will soon have light clothing soiled and look much less attractive than if originally clad in black or blue. Do not feed the children sweets on a journey. They will upset their stomachs and their dispositions and get themselves and their surroundings sticky. Keep to plain and simple foods on a trip. There is an old adage, "He who travels far, eats little." It is as true of children as of adults. There is a common feeling that a trip is an event to be celebrated by festive food. That is a dangerous doctrine. Better have meals at regular hours if possible and warm simple dishes, and then forget food between meals.

To keep the children contented they should have a few new toys for their entertainment—a game or two, dolls, blunt scissors for cut-outs, or a mechanical top. Beware of books or articles which call for careful looking as this makes a strain on the eyes and will give one a headche. And do not select toys which drop on the floor and will be picked up with their load of germs and handled. The children are too likely to put their hands—germs and all—to their mouths. A ball for bouncing is not desirable on this account.

If there is a small child, take along a strip of muslin to cover the seat before you lay the child to sleep on it. And do not forget a supply of small cloths to wet frequently and wash soiled faces and hands. The calmer and less excited you can keep the children, the easier the journey will be for all concerned. Do not keep pointing out this and that object of interest or talk too much to the child. Let him rest if he will.

ROASTS

When roasting veal, beef or pork, make them more delicious by adding the flavor of certain vegetables to them. A tomato sliced over the top, adds tartness. Its acid helps dissolves the connective tissue of the meat and will make it more tender. Some like the flavor of onion in their roasts and will fry minced onion in the fat before they put the roast on to cook. Mangoes chopped and sprinkled over the top of the roast will give to it their distinctive flavor. Raw carrots, sliced and laid on top of the meat, give it an additional deliciousness.

FRUIT ODDS AND ENDS

If you find in your cupboard one orange, one banana, a sauce dish of strawberries and one slice of pine apple, do not set them on the table, as is, and let the family draw cuts or quarrel over which shall have which. Pretend that was just what you wanted, and make them into a cock-tail. Place your sherbet cups in a row, one for each member of the family, and slice each kind of fruit, a little in each cup. If you have a few marshmallows in the house, dice them into the fruit and set away to blend. Chill the whole in the ice box, next the ice if possible. When ready to serve dip a spoonful of whipped cream over each sherbet glass, if you have it. This transforms your fruit into a delicacy instead of a "left over."

FACE POWDERS

Never use a cheap face powder. It may contain mercury, tin or bismuth. Lead carbonate is a dangerous ingredient of some face powders but it is rarely used in the best powders. Zinc Oxide, used to give weight to face powder is not harmful. Freakish shades of face powder are more likely to contain colors which are poisonous than are the usual shades. Face powders which do not immediately appear to injure the skin, may do so after long use. The only way to be safe is to use only the highest grade brands. The cheap product is likely to be expensive in the long run.

BUTTERMILK

For persons who are inclined to overeat of meat or beans or other proteins, buttermilk is a good protective food. The lactic acid in buttermilk or clabber aids in cleaning out the bacteria which accumulate in the intestines. Buttermilk does not contain the precious vitamine A. which has gone into the cream or butter. Therefore cream or butter should be used to complete the diet. But buttermilk is a most valuable food, with a value all its own. Too often it is fed to the pigs and chickens and the children and adults deprived of its corrective benefits.

Au Gratin is the "presto chango" which transforms many a plain food into a delightfully mysterious one. The beauty of it is that you don't know what you are getting and are intrigued into eating the right things without realizing that you are being "worked." Almost anything may be au gratined, from meats to tomatoes and onions. You simply make a white sauce and cover it, and season richly with grated cheese and chopped peppers, then bake in the oven for a half hour, until the ingredients are well blended and have that delicious roasted taste. Try it tomorrow. Au gratin everything you can lay your hands on and see if your family doesn't set up a howl of joy.

HAS RARE DEED DATED IN 1762

D. E. Packard has in his possession at the Savings Bank one of the rarest documents, probably in the United States, a deed to a plat of land, which was executed May 6th, 1762—before there were any United States of America. The deed is given by one Sam'l Barker to his brother, Jared Barker, and despite the 165 years since it was written is still clearly legible, demonstrating the quality of paper and ink used in olden days.

Mr. Packard secured the deed from the Henry Barker estate, for which he was executor some 25 years ago. A number of direct descendants of the Sam'l. Barker who drew up the instrument are living in and around Belmond today, among them being Mrs. Lucy Bamford and her children, Mrs. T. A. Davenport, Percy Lamford, Harry Bamford, Mrs. Harry Brooks. In the copy of the deed, as given below, notice the spelling, the description of the boundary lines of the land, and the phrasing used. Next time you are in town, stop at the Bank and ask Mr. Packard to show you this deed. It is a remarkable curiosity. The deed follows:

To all People to whom these Presents shall come, Greeting.

Know ye, that I, Samuel Barker, Junior, of Branford in New Haven County and Colony of Connecticut, For the consideration of ten pounds lawful money, received to my full satisfaction of my brother Jared Barker of said Branford do give, grant, bargain, sell and confirm unto the said Jared Barker and to his heirs and assigns forever, a right in ye orchard and barn ye was ye estate of my Honorable Father William Barker deceased being ye same that was divided and set out to me in the distribution of ye dec'd estate. Ye whole lot contains four acres and three quarters being same more or less, and is bounded North on Edw'd Russell's land, East on ye river, South on ye part said dec'd estate as was set out to my brother and sister William and Abigail Barker and West by Eleares Stents land.

TO HAVE AND TO HOLD the above granted and bargained premises, with the appurtenances thereof, unto him the said Jared Barker and his heirs and assigns forever, to his and their own proper use and behoof. And also I the said Samuel Barker do, for myself and heirs, executors and administrators, covenant with the said Jared Barker and his heirs and assigns; that at and until the ensealing of these Presents I am well seized of the premises, as a good indefeasible estate in the Fee—simple; and have good right to bargain and sell the same, in manner and form as is above written; and that the same is free from all encumbrances whatsoever. And Furthermore, I the said Samuel Barker, do by these Presents, bind myself and heirs forever, to warrant and defend the above granted and bargained premises, to him, the said Jared Barker and his heirs and assigns, against all claims and demands whatsoever.

IN WITNESS whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and seal, the Sixth day of May in the Second year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord George the Third of Great Britain & c King: Annoque Domini, 1762.

Absolute knowledge have I none,

Heard a policeman on his beat
Say to a laborer on the street
That he had a letter just last week,
Written in the finest Greek,
From a Chinese coolie in Timbuctoo
Who said that a man in Cuba knew
Of a colored gent in a Texas town
Who got it straight from a circus clown
That a man in Klondike says he knows
From a gang of unwashed Eskimos
About some fellow in Borneo
Who knew a man who claims to know
A hermit who lives besides a lake
Whose mother-in-law will undertake
To prove her husband's sister's niece
Has stated in a printed piece
That she has a son who knows about
The date the new Ford car comes out!

In all this row among the Izaak Walton Leaguers, and all the hullabaloo being carried on, and all the argument pro and con—mostly con—over President Coolidge catching fish with worms—we mean using worms to catch fish—everybody seems to have missed the point that regardless of whether Cal uses worms or artificial bait, it's just as hard on the fish.

Here's how to our new nightwatch, Jack Dempsey. No, not the Prize Fighter—the "Irish Soloist," our well known clog dancer. Jack will make a good nightwatch, we believe, but if he ever runs into a gang of bank burglars at 3 g. m. he wants to watch his step or they'll teach him a few more he doesn't know.

Can anybody tell us why is a nightwatch anyway? What does he watch?

Seems to us, the Council should have reduced Jack's salary for the first month, on account of one of our well known citizens being gone and the nightwatch having much less to watch.

AGRICULTURAL NEWS NOTES

JUNE POULTRY PROFITS TUMBLE

Low egg and poultry prices last June and smaller egg yields sharply reduced the profits from this branch of farming in Iowa, according to the monthly report of 311 Iowa record flocks, just issued at Iowa State College.

The net income in June above feed cost was $11,716 as compared with $22,650 in May. The feed cost during the two months for the layers was practically the same altho slightly higher in May. Egg yields were lower in June or 14.6 eggs per hen as compared with 17.2 in May.

"Egg prices are on the up grade and will probably be steady or higher from now on," says E. J. Rood, extension poultry specialist. Eggs can be produced at present for a cost of 12 cents a dozen with proper feeding and culling, Mr. Rood asserts. With such low cost of production, the poultry should make a fair profit. With high grain prices prevailing, producers should feed well, but make sure to get rid of the low or non-producers.

While 32 poultry keepers had gross incomes from their flocks of $200 or over in May, only 13 reached this income in June. The highest return from a flock in the state was $1,081.94, the amount obtained by Guy Brady of Sac City, White Leghorn breeder. Charles Platts of Lake Mills had the second best return, $398. His flock consisted of more than one hundred purebred breed.

W. H. Cochran, Scranton, received a gross income of $343 in June, the third best in the state. Mr. Cochran has White Leghorns. The fourth largest return, $330, was secured by Fred Baer, Montpelier, with his S. C. Rhode Island Reds. The fifth largest return for the state was $310 the income of Mrs. C. D. Martin of New Providence. Mrs. Martin owns Buff Leghorns.

Mrs. Clyde W. Cooper of Boone, with 219 White Leghorn layers, secured the best average egg yield of any flock in the state. Her hens averaged 24 eggs each for the 30 days of June.

Elmer C. Darling, Denison altho owning but 10 layers, had the second highest average egg yield, 22.4 eggs per hen. The third highest average, 22.2 egs per hen, was obtained by Mrs. W. M. Ferrin, Winthrop, with her 164 S. C. Rhode Island Reds.

Fourth and fifth best averages were made by Mrs. Roy Curtis, Donahue, and Jesse D. Strickler, Ogden, both of whom have White Leghorns. Mrs. Curtis had an average of 22 eggs for each of 157 layers and Mr. Strickler 21.7 for each of his 164 hens.

While the egg yield in June was below May, it is slightly higher than for June a year ago. The April and May averages this year were higher also than for last year.

FEED MORE CORN WHEN CHEAP

When corn is cheap farmers feed more of it to their hogs than when it is high in price. This was demonstrated by a group of farmers in Iowa County who for the past two years have been keeping cost accounts in cooperation with the Agricultural Economics Section of the Iowa Agricultural Experiment Station and the United States Department of Agriculture.

Corn early in 1925 was selling for a dollar a bushel and with this situation, farmers fed 50 pounds less of it per hundred pounds of pork than they did in 1926 with corn averaging 60 cents a bushel. However, in 1925 the Iowa County men fed 25 pounds more of other feeds in addition to corn than they did in 1926.

Corn was the principal cost item in producing pork the accounts showed. It constituted 51 percent of the gross expense in 1926 and 55 percent in 1925.

Some of the farmers who kept accounts were much more efficient than others in producing pork. One man obtained a return of $1.54 for each bushel of corn fed to his hogs during 1926, while another received but 21 cents. The average for all of the men was 97 cents.

One man fed only 5.3 bushels of corn for each hundred of pork produced while another fed 18.3 bushels. The average was 8 bushels in 1926 as compared with 7.1 bushels in 1925.

The average profit from hogs on the 21 Iowa County farms on which accounts were kept was $843 in 1926 and $752 in 1925. The cost of producing pork was about a dollar less in 1926 than in 1925, or $9.01 in the former and $10 in the latter.

IOWA THIRDIN PROVED BULLS

Wisconsin leads the nation, Michigan is second and Iowa is third in the number of "proved" dairy bulls according to information compiled by the United States Department of Agriculture. A proved bull is one which has sired five or more daughters who in cow testing association work have produced more milk and butterfat than did their dams.

On this basis, Iowa has 14 proved bulls, trailing far behind Wisconsin with 76 and Michigan with 35. The daughters of the 14 Iowa proved bulls average 73 pounds more butterfat and 1,653 pounds more milk than their dams. With 40 cent butterfat prices, each daughter would bring her owner about $30 more per year than her dam.

In order to be a proved sire a bull must be at least 5 years old, the Iowa State College dairy specialists point out. If a bull is put into service at 1 year of age, his first daughters will be coming into milk three years later, or when the sire is practically 4 years of age. It will then be another year before year records of the daughters can be obtained.

Too often dairy bulls are purchased while young and sold before their first daughters have freshened—before their real worth is known—the specialists say. In the federal survey of proved bulls, an inquiry regarding some of the best proved bulls brought forth the following answers from the farm owners:

"This bull was butchered a year ago before returns of testing were received."

"Sold for beef. If we had been in testing association when we owned him, he might still be alive."

"Beefed him because not many people will buy an aged bull."

"We found out after we sold him for beef that he was an outstanding bull."

In contrast to the answers of those who had disposed of their good bulls before their worth was learned was this answer, "We still have this bull and will keep him in service as long as possible."

TELL WHY JELLY DOESN'T JELL

The kind of sugar used is not responsible for the usual failures in jelly making, assert home economics specialists at Iowa State College after conducting tests with both cane and beet sugars.

A series of tests were made in order to show that the housewife's failure to make jelly "jell" is due to causes other than the kind of sugar used. From these tests it is known that a fruit juice must contain a certain amount of acid and pectin with sugar added in the right proportions to make jelly successfully.

Gooseberries were selected as one of the fruits for use in the tests since they contain a sufficient amount of acid and pectin to form a jelly. Equal amounts of cane and beet sugar were used in different tests, the same temperature and the same amounts of juice being used. No one of the judges could determine which of the jellies had been made with cane or which had been made with beet sugar.

Jelly failures are not due to the kind of sugar used but may be caused by any of the following:

The juice may contain too little pectin.

The juice may contain too little acid.

The juice may contain too much water which dilutes the pectin and acid.

The jelly may not be cooked enough.

The jelly may be overcooked.

Too little sugar for the amount of pectin in the juice may be used, which gives a very firm, hard jelly.

Too much sugar for the amount of the pectin in the juice may be used. This gives a runny, sticky, sirup jelly.

Under-ripe fruit contains more pectin than over-ripe fruit.

ACID PHOSPHATE HELPS CLOVER

Applying 50 to 200 pounds per acre of acid phosphate in the spring to an oat field in which clover or alfalfa is seeded will generally help greatly in getting a stand of the legume, according to results obtained in experiments at Iowa State College. Many farmers also have found this to be true, asserts J. L. Boatman, extension soils specialist of the college.

However, it is unwise to apply acid phosphate on acid soils, the specialists say. To grow clover or alfalfa well on acid soils, the first step should be to apply lime, then this may well be followed with acid phosphate.

Acid phosphate proves especially beneficial on soils which are low in fertility. When farmers do not wish to gamble sufficiently to treat a whole field with acid phosphate, a good plan is to buy enough to cover a strip across the field. This may then be compared with the clover or alfalfa alongside to determine whether or not the phosphate will be profitable.

THE LIVING PORCH

Four square walls may be cozy enough for winter, but in hot weather, the house should be merely an annex to the porch. Then it is we appreciate the screened-in back porch, away from prying eyes, cool and comfy, and flyless and mosquitoless. Use galvanized screen if you can, for it will last longer . Do not clutter up the living porch by anything not needed there. One can conserve room by having a drop leaf table or a shelf built to be raised or lowered at meal time. On each side of this a bench may be placed. The tea wagon, which brings the food from the kitchen, may be serving table or sideboard, and may hold the general dishes and accessories which the centrl board is too small to accommodate. A handy little cupboard over the table is convenient into which to slip the sugar, salt, pepper, napkins and extra dishes between meals. This makes table setting easy. There is a thrill about eating in the open, with trees waving their arms at you, the fresh grass in view, and birds whistling to you from the distance.

Between meals the porch can be used for many household occupations. One may iron out there, or pit cherries or shell peas, or Mother may take her nap on a cot there, or it may accommodate a home-made writing desk or an easy chair for sewing. Fresh air is always good for everyone, and to sit in the cool out-doors of an evening, rather than sweltering indoors is a health boon well worth the cost of a screened in porch.

DON'T RINSE OUT THE CAN

When you empty tomato soup, corn, or any product out of the tin can, do not pour in water and rinse the can out to get the last morsel. To do this increases the danger that you might get ptomaine poisoning. Better waste a few grains of food than pay a big doctor bill, not to mention the loss of time and suffering of being sick and the chance of a fatality.

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I.—Garth Guthrie, Canadian war veteran, having to live in the open on account of weakened lungs, is factor of a Hudson's Bay post at Elkwan. He came back from the conflict with a permanently scarred face, which he realizes cost him the love of his fiancee, Edith Falconer. Sir Charles Guthrie, his brother, is a millionaire war profiteer.

CHAPTER II.—With Etienne Savanne, halfbreed, his firm friend, Garth meets Doctor Quarrier, geologist, and his sister Joan. Their schooner has drifted ashore. Quarrier complains he has been robbed by a man known as "Laughing McDonald" or to the Indians as "McDonald Ha! Ha!" because of a scar which gives him a perpetual grin. McDonald is Garth's competitor for the fur trade. At Elkwan an Indian girl, Ninda, tuberculosis victim, whom Garth had befriended, is dying. Quarrier hints that Ninda is Garth's mistress, which is hotly resented. Joan, trained war nurse, offers for Ninda, but the girl dies.

CHAPTER III.—Garth tells Joan part of the reasons for his presence at Elkwan. He takes the Quarriers to Albany, from whence they can proceed to Montreal. Charles Guthrie writes reproaching his brother for not coming home. Charles' wife assures him Ethel still loves him, but Garth in his heart knows better. His scarred face has separated them.

CHAPTER IV.—Three of McDonald's party visit Elkwan seeking to buy gun shells. From them Garth learns of evil talk among the Indians concerning him and Ninda, and realizes Quarrier will spread his version of the affair.

CHAPTER V.—With Etienne's help Garth wins the friendship of Saul Souci, "medicine man" and treaty chief of the Crees, and gets his promise to persuade the Crees to take their furs to Elkwan instead of to McDonald. Garth is ambushed by Joe Mokoman, Ninda's reputed father, whom the factor had driven from Elkwan. "Shot," Garth's airedale companion on many battlefields in France, saves him, and the Indian is taken, a prisoner, to Elkwan.

CHAPTER VI.—Garth sends Mokoman to McDonald with a message of defiance, and the war is on.

CHAPTER VII.—Garth hails with joy the freezing of the strait, which will enable Souci's followers to bring their furs to Elkwan without difficulty. Etienne craftily spreads reports that McDonald and his schooner are bewitched, and evil will befall all who trade with him.

Later, snug before their fire in the wind-break of the timber, two men and six dogs slept the sleep of exhaustion, while the norther drove across the white tundra.

* * * * * * *

Although the wind ceased and the snow ceased by noon of the following day, the crippled dogs held Guthrie to his camp. With his glasses he located the smoke of cooking fires in the scrub across the basin, and in the early afternoon Etienne slipped his moccasins into the thongs of his snowshoes and started for the camp of the hunters, while Garth, whose knowledge of Cree was limited, stayed with the dogs.

As Garth watched a boiling kettle of salt wavy, and bannock baking in a tilted frying pan, the dogs announced the return of Etienne through the dusk. Much depended upon what the head man had learned, and Guthrie probed the immobile features as the half-breed thrust his shoes in a drift and stepped to the fire.

"Well, what news?"

From the gravity of his expression it was clear that Savanne was struggling with a problem difficult and baffling.

"Ver' queer t'ing—ver' queer!" was the unresponsive answer as Etienne dropped his mittens on their neck thong to warm his hands at the fire.

"What is?"

"What dose Cree tell me. Dere are eight hunter wid camp een dis valley here; some from Elkwan and some from down de coast. I talk to dem all. W'at dey say ees ver' strange."

"Well, for heaven's sake shoot!"

"Souci has been here two—t'ree day back. He invite dem to the Canoe Riviere w'ere he mak' de beeg medicine."

"Did he get them to promise to take their fur to the schooner?"

"No! Mokoman, he talk to dem strong, too, but dey not know w'at day do w'en I say de strait froze. Dey have mooch fox—silver, black and cross."

"They are going to Souci's pow-wow?"

"Yes, and hunter down de riviere—all weel go."

"How far is it?"

Garth's mouth shut hard. "Well, Etienne, we haven't been invited, but we'll surely attend that party."

Etienne nodded. "But dees Souci, w'y he tak' de troubl' to do dees t'ing?"

"He's going to tell the hunters that the spirits are the friends of McDonald and they must take their fur to the schooner."

"I feex dat for heem. I tell de Cree ovair dere dat you and I watch de schooner at night, an' see fire come out of her an' de devil dance on de mast. I scare dose squaw so bad, one had de fit."

"How about the men?"

"Dey wait to see Souci—but dey are scare."

"Where is this Mokoman?"

"He has gone to de Canoe. He was not wid Souci."

"Well, we head for the Canoe at daylight. Will the dogs be able to travel? If not, we go without them."

"Ah-hah, de dogs can walk to de Canoe."

"We may not persuade the hunters to cross the ice with us, but we can make it hot for sorcerer Souci when he tries his mumbo-jumbo. Will he dare make his medicine when he sees us?"

Savanne scratched his head before replying. "Somet'ing een dis dat ees queer. Dey say Souci has not met Mokoman, an' he was here on de islan' long tam. Dere was troubl', too, wid French companee, down de Rabbit."

"What kind of trouble—fighting?"

"Ah-hah! Dis Blackbeard run de French Cree ovair de ice—drive dem off de islan'."

"He did, did he? Well, that will cook McDonald's goose for next year. The government will have the police up here waiting for that schooner on her return. Run 'em off the island? Good! I only wish he'd try that with us. I wouldn't mind meeting up with Monsieur Breault of St. Johns."

Etienne drew a long skinning knife from his inside sash. "I would lak to cut dem whiskeer wid dis—ver' short, een de neck."

"I'll bet you would, you old knife-fighter! Like the job you did on One-Eyed Louis, up at God's lake."

Etienne squinted along the edge of the knife—then ran a thumb over it.

"Breault insult ma femme," he said quietly, and returned the knife to its sheath.

In the blue dawn the dog-team pulled out of camp bound down river to the west fork, which would take them north through a gash in the barrens to the watershed of the Canoe. The norther had left much drifted snow and the stiff legs of the huskies cut the pace to a walk. Shot, exuberant after his two days of enforced idleness, ranged to the front and flanks in search of ptarmigan, rabbit and mouse. Along the river, the broken-out drift in the old trail marked the hunters on their way to the rendezvous on the Canoe. It was evident that the Cree trappers in the north of the island were bound for the medicine lodge of the old shaman. Twenty to thirty hunters with a catch of at least one hundred foxes would gather to witness the necromancy of the conjurer. On the power of the old man's magic would depend the destination of twenty thousand dollars' worth of fox pelts. Whether Elkwan or the schooner at Seal cove was to enjoy a rich Christmas trade would be determined by the ability of Saul and his spirit coadjutors to nullify the superstitious fears aroused by the sinister rumors of the crafty Etienne. It would be a battle worth watching, thought Garth, keen for the meeting in the lonely valley of the Canoe between the grasping Cree who had betrayed him and the resourceful Savanne. But one condition he had imposed on the half-breed—that there should be no bloodshed. They had come to Akimiski to save the trade, of the future, as well as the present, and under no circumstances was the head man to abuse or threaten either Saul or his sons. He, Guthrie, would have something to say concerning the long arm of the company in its future dealings with the man who had deserted to the enemy; but the command was—no fighting.

"If he shows up at the pow-wow, and interferes, I'll leave him to you."

"I tak' good care of heem," grunted the other.

At the fork they left the main river trail to follow the branch leading north.

As the tender-footed huskies drew the sled at a walk or slow trot, Shot reveled in the game sign of the scrub along shore. On a foray into the timber, the trail of the snowshoe-rabbit, which had first lured him, was crossed by that of a more enticing fox. Keen with the lust for the hunt, Shot followed the trail back through the scrub and out into the open barren on the shoulders of the valley. There, far from the river, he stopped. Before him the webbed imprint of snowshoes cut the fox tracks he followed. The dog sniffed curiously, but it was a vague, unfamiliar scent that the fresh trail carried. Slowly at first, then at a lope, he followed it down through the timber. As he neared the river the voices of Garth and Etienne drifted faintly in from the ice. The dog was puzzled. From his rigid war training he had learned silence when business was afoot. And this seemed business. By the hour he had watched shell holes—from trenches—had patrolled forest, as at present, in absolute silence. In some occult way the keen-witted dog seemed that again, there in the white north far from Flemish battle fields, he was at his old trade, guarding with quivering nostrils, eyes and ears tense, the safety of the man out there on the ice.

On he went, weaving in and out of the thick scrub, relentless as a wolf. Suddenly the airedale stiffened, hair rising like brush bristles along his spine. Near the shore in the thicket ahead was something dark, motionless.

The war dog froze, stiff as the spruce above him, one paw suspended in air. A vague scent reached his working nostrils. Then, like a lynx through the dusk, the airedale drifted up the trail.

Out on the river ice the voice of Garth called, "Here, Shot!" But the head of the dog did not turn. His small, terrier eyes never left the shape on the snow. He knew that the lean, brown barrel thrust before the dark body was a rifle—a maker of fire and death.

Three—four steps nearer, then gathering beneath him the steel springs which were the muscles of his legs, the airedale leaped. As Shot's fangs ripped into the shoulder of the Indian's capote, the rifle exploded. A bullet ricocheted from the frozen sled cover and whined away over the river. Two men dropped behind the sled, as the team stopped. Reaching up, Etienne wrenched his cased rifle from its lashings and fired twice below a shred of blue smoke hanging in the spruce, where an enraged dog silently grappled with an unknown enemy. But his fire was not returned. There, under the trees, an Indian frantically fought to turn his rifle on the maddened brute who had ripped parks to ribbons and hurled him backward to the snow. Parrying the snap of punishing fangs with a blow of his gun butt, the Indian gained his feet, to meet another lunge before he aimed his gun. Again the dog leaped, carrying the man with him. Fangs slashed at bared throat—a choked cry—the airedale's jaws shut on dark flesh—ripped—and the would-be assassin lay on the snow with a torn throat.

There Garth and Etienne found them, the airedale lying beside his kill. Etienne bent to stare, with an oath, into the features, knotted in their death grimace, of—Joe Mokoman.

"Ambush us, eh?" snarled the half-breed. "You do fine job, Joe Mokoman." And he spurned the body with the bow of his snowshoe.

"So he meant to get that fur if he had to bury us in the snow?" said Garth, turning from the ugly picture to his dog, still whining with the heat of battle. "Good old Shottie!" And the man hugged the hairy shoulders of his friend. "You tracked him down for Garth, didn't you, old comrade of mine?"

"He dam good dog, Shot, eh?" cried Etienne, slapping the shaggy back. He know more dan some men; he know Joe, he hunt us."

"He thought Joe was a German sharpshooter, didn't you, Shot?" And seated on the snow, Garth rocked to and fro, rubbing the ears of his dog, soothing his excitement in the low notes of a language none but the wriggling airedale understood.

"Wal, we buree dis skunk een de snow and let m'sieu' fox deeg him out."

"That's all we can do. He must have heard from the traveling Indians we were bound for the Canoe and decided to stop us. Do you suppose that McDonald knows we are here and sicked him on us?"

Etienne shook his head. "He bin up dis end de islan', so de hunter say."

"I'm sorry this happened," said Garth. "There's no telling what kind of a tale they'll make of it. I wish a sled would show up so we could show our evidence."

"Eef we stay on islan' after McDonal' hear hees man ees dead, we have to fight for sure."

"I'm not afraid of McDonald," laughed Garth, "but I don't want the Indians drawn into the fight. We're here for fur, not trouble, and I'll have to answer to my superiors for what happens. That's why I want you to be careful when we meet Souci. No fighting—understand?"

Savanne nodded. "De hunter know Etienne Savanne," said the half-breed with finality. "Dey weel not start troubl' wid heem."

"All right! Now let's make tracks for the Canoe and that medicine lodge of Souci's."

With their snowshoes, they heaped a mound of snow over the body of the skulker in the spruce, to be found by the lynx and foxes, and started. At noon the team turned down into the valley of the Canoe.

In the windbreak of the spruce on the shore of the frozen river, the men from Elkwan found the tipis of the hunters. From north and east and south had come the fox trappers with their families for the great medicine making of Souci, the shaman. The wigwams hummed with gossip of the crossing of the strait by the tall factor of Elkwan to fight for the trade with McDonald Ha! Ha! From valley to valley Mokoman had traveled, urging the hunters to go to the schooner. Black Breault, too, and Skene had visited many of the camps, but as yet the wily hunters had sold little fur, hoping by their seeming reluctance to obtain higher prices. Also, in the last few days, rumors, vague terrifying, had been adrift. A hunter from the Ptarmigan claimed he had been down to the hills above Seal cove and seen fire dancing on the masts of the boat at night; that black magic was being made by the man with the face of a mad wolverine. Another swore that his cousin, trapping on the Calling river, had been to the schooner and heard devil music from a box. An old squaw had already planted panic among the women with a story that bewitched hunters would leave McDonald's ship to desert their wives and children.

Selwood of Sleepy Cat

By FRANK H. SPEARMAN

While Carpy, with Scott helping him, was dressing the wounds, Pardaloe came in to see how Selwood came on and give him the news. Atkins had been killed in the street fight. Barbanet, sullen, and Bartoe, struggling and screaming, had been cruelly dragged from the barn to the fate of their kind. "Abe Cole," said Pardaloe in reciting the incident, "wanted me to go 'long and sit on the court. 'No,' I says, 'I won't sit on no court for nobody.' 'Why not?' says he. 'Why not?' says I. 'Why, dash it, before they get through they might take it into their heads to hang me!'" McAlpin, Pardaloe continued, had prevented "the boys" from taking out Big Haynes.

"No," thundered Pardaloe mildly. "But he's got Haynes hid and they can't find him."

"I don't think it right to hang him," said Carpy. "He's nothing like as bad as the others. Haynes claims Atkins and Bartoe threatened to kill him if he didn't turn in with them."

Scott proved a good assistant. But when Carpy had finished and Pardaloe was still talking, the Indian regarded Selwood with a peculiar smile. There were many lights and shades in Bob Scott's very homely smile, many varieties of meaning—and those who knew him well could read them pretty well. Selwood, taking keen note again of what was going on around him, perceived that the smile meant news; but the wounded man was too used up to ask for it. He only looked his own inquiry into his retainer's eyes and waited for him to speak.

The half-breed, treading about the room even in boots almost as lightly and silently as his moccasined kind, gathering up the odds and ends of Carpy's work, did not lose his smile of import, nor did Selwood's expression lose its demand for information.

"What is it, Bob?" he asked at length.

Scott, lifting his eyes, answered with a broader smile and another question: "Got any money?"

No inquiry could have surprised Selwood more. "Not a whole lot," he confessed with abating interest. "How much do you want?"

"Two thousand dollars."

Selwood took it for a joke. "Well, I'm broke just at present; but if it's coming to you, you'll get it. What do you want with two thousand dollars?"

"I've got a man down below the barn you been wanting to see."

"Who's the man I want to see?" asked Selwood, with only moderate interest.

"The old padre."

Carpy was stowing his instruments away in his bag. He looked up with an exclamation of astonishment. Selwood regarded Scott searchingly. "You mean the old padre I wanted to see?" Scott nodded.

"So I Talked to Him."

Selwood, who had taken a chair, rose to his feet, and with one hand picked up his coat to throw over his shoulders. Scott helped him. "Where in thunder did the old padre turn up?"

"McAlpin passed him on the Calabasas trail about an hour ago, when he was bringing in Dave. He had a couple of Gunlocks with him." Scott so designated the Indians from Gunlock reservation. "McAlpin told me he met a black-robe and that he was on his way up here and going to camp along the river. So I rode down there and talked with his guides. They told me they had a very old black-robe along. So I talked to him. They're heading for the Blackfeet country. 'I saw the big fire in the sky,' he told me, 'and I said to my men the new town is burning; many people are in distress. We will go there before we start up the river!'

"I held my lantern into his face," continued Scott. "He is the same man whose picture you had in your room up at the hall. And I told him there was a white man here wanted to see him. And to go to the horse barn if it wasn't burned. But he said he would camp down by the river. He's there."

If there was a surprise for Carpy in the recital there was a greater one awaiting him in Selwood's reception of it. For a moment Selwood did not speak. When he did, Carpy stood open-eyed. "Well—" said Selwood deliberately. "If you've got the man, the money is coming to you—when I can dig it up. But don't hold him on my account—I don't care about seeing him."

Carpy was well nigh speechless with amazement. "What!" he exclaimed, recovering his breath. "'Don't care about seeing him?' Man!" he cried. "Don't want to see the man—if it is the man—that's got your whole story? Have you lost your senses?"

Selwood, standing unmoved, parried the attack with stubborn indifference. He felt that Christie had cast him off—what did a name, good or bad, mean to him now? But he would say not one word, and Doctor Carpy, unable to stir him with eloquent reproach, in the end lost his own temper. "Here after all these years," he protested, "that blamed old martinet Roper has been running over you, and you get a chance to nail him, by Jing, you won't take the trouble to do it!

"All right. I'll do it myself," the doctor exclaimed. "I won't let that old buck run over me any longer. Bob," continued the incensed surgeon, pointing his finger at Scott, "hold on to your black-robe and his red-skins. If we can't find anything else for breakfast, bring 'em up here for a cup o' coffee, anyway." And with Selwood staring at the wall, and the half-breed grinning perplexed, Carpy flung out of the room.

In the gloom of the hall, Carpy, still exasperated by Selwood's obstinacy and talking resentfully to himself, almost ran into Christie, a pathetic figure, he thought, waiting for a chance to speak to somebody. As he stopped with an apology, she seemed encouraged, for she stepped close to him. "Doctor!" she exclaimed, in a frightened whisper, "is Mr. Selwood terribly hurt?"

Carpy laughed as he looked into her appealing eyes—one of those reassuring laughs that would bring life and hope to a dying man. "Christie," he murmured, "there's more the matter with that fellow than just Starbuck's slashing. I think," continued the doctor, eyeing her with a significant expression, "that if you'd talk you could tell—better than anybody else—what's a-matter with him. Christie, you're a fine girl, good enough for the best, or I wouldn't talk to you so plain. But you're in love with John Selwood and he's in love with you. There, there! I didn't mean to make you cry, child."

She looked up. "What can I do, Doctor?" she pleaded. "I thought the world of him—why shouldn't I confess it to you? You wouldn't betray me. I do yet. Now he has saved my life—and more than my life. But how do you think I felt when I was told by that vile man—and by him—that he was a gambler?"

The doctor looked perplexed. "I knowed it, Christie. I knowed that was what made the trouble 'tween you," he said. "I couldn't blame you so much, neither," he added regretfully, "even if I'm nothing but a poor drunken doctor myself."

"You shan't say that!" she exclaimed indignantly. "You're nothing of the kind! You're the kindest, best doctor in the whole world!"

He shook his head. "Tell the truth, girl, and shame the devil. If I wasn't I wouldn't be wasting out my life in this hell-hole. But I want to say only this: I wisht somehow it could be fixed up. I may not be able to speak it in words, but I know what goes into the making of a man, my girl; and whatever it is, it's in John Selwood. And if he ever quits the business he's in, you'll see a man all through him."

A flood of words broke through Christie's pent-up feeling. "Oh, I believe every word of it, Doctor. You've no need to tell me that. He's just the finest man in the world, if he'd only—" A timid suggestion occurred to her. "You, Doctor, if you'd ask him to give up that business—you have more influence with him than any one else—"

Carpy cut her off. "Christie," he said, emphasizing every deliberate word with a shake of the head, "you've got more influence over him in your one little finger than I have all over me.

"But, Christie, I've noticed this: it ain't so good when somebody coaxes a man to quit anything—even if he does quit it—as when he quits a thing himself, out of just his own free will. Now if John Selwood ever quits the game of his own accord—bet on him!"

The look Christie gave him as she went back to her room made him ten years younger. He strode toward the stairs, only to encounter Margaret Hyde hurrying to meet him.

"Why, yes, the boy's chipped up a little," grumbled Carpy in answer to Margaret's manifest anxiety—for he was thinking of his own perplexities—"nothing to hurt much," he added. You look queer: what's a-matter with you? Ain't shot anywheres, are you?"

The drawn face and the sunken, anxious eyes of his housekeeper made his question almost an involuntary one. She answered to reassure him, but she could not hide her distress.

"I'm not wounded, Doctor. But might I, I wonder," she managed to say in her low, restrained voice—a voice that, no matter how often it broke, never wholly lost a note of once gentle breeding—"might I," she added, repeating her plea, "speak to John Selwood right away—just for a few minutes?"

Doctor Carpy lifted his eyebrows with a grating laugh, and as if things were getting too complicated. "So that's what you're hanging around for? Why didn't you say so? Well, now, I'll tell you; if you're worrying about John, don't do it. That boy ain't hurted none to speak of. Shucks! I never thought—"

She caught her breath. "It's not about him," she exclaimed, in distress, "far from it! But I must speak with him."

"'Fraid it's too late to ketch him now," objected the doctor, still mystified by her strange interest. "The boys are waiting to set up another telegraph pole party. And they're waiting for John to come down to the station before they begin. See him when he comes back, Meg."

Her lips could scarcely frame words. "I must see John Selwood," she repeated, with a supreme effort at self-control. "I must see him now. Who is in there with him?"

"Bill Pardaloe and Bob Scott."

"Doctor," she exclaimed, stepping closer in her almost frantic appeal, "help me! Ask them to step out a moment—I tell you, I must talk to him alone—now."

It was impossible not to acknowledge her extremity. Carpy reopened Selwood's door. He spoke to Pardaloe and Scott. "Look here, boys," he said, beckoning with his head, "both of you. Step out here a minute. Meg wants to talk to John, private."

Selwood, cleaned up and brushed up as decently as he could be with his bandaged arm and hands, stood before the table preparing to go to the barn. He was buckling on his cartridge belt; his coat was thrown over his shoulder. Hearing Margaret's footsteps, he looked around. One glance revealed the agony in her face. He laid unlighted on the table a cigarette that Scott had rolled for him, and spoke. "What is it, Margaret?" He pointed to a chair. "You're not hurt?"

Looking at him like one dumb with emotion, she sat down. When she spoke, she had already forgotten the question he had just asked. "Mr. Selwood—"

He interrupted her. He had taken his revolver up from the table and was slowly slipping cartridges back into the cylinder. "Since when," he demanded with good-natured unconcern, "did I stop being just plain 'John'?"

"Never, to me—never," she said brokenly. "But tonight I come to beg my life at your hands—hoping, praying you won't deny me. Let me tell you what I mean—tell you my story. I was married ten years ago, when I was eighteen. Oh, yes," she said, to cut off his surprise, "I know how old I look—trouble has done that. For three years I had the best husband in the world—kind, considerate, devoted. His friends persuaded him to go into politics. They elected him city treasurer of the little town where we lived in Michigan. That was his undoing; it meant being out nights, being a good fellow, drinking, spending, wasting.

"It lasted two years. And during that time I fell sick. I was very sick, a long time, and he did everything he could in the world to care for me—to relieve me. I cost him so much, oh, so much for doctors—more than I wanted him to spend; but he would try everything that gave us the least hope. He said I should have the best care, and he gave it liberally, extravagantly, to me. Then—one night he come home. He had been drinking." She stopped an instant. "It was the first time in my life, John, I had seen him in drink," she went on. "He told me that night his accounts were short—that the next day his books would be examined; that he must face the penitentiary—or run away."

In her agony she sat, now twisting and clasping her fingers, now her hands; now looking at the floor, now looking at Selwood imploringly—her words wrung from her reluctant lips. "When he told me that," she faltered on, "I was frightened. I was so weak that night! And I was wicked. I told him to go, John—to go at once. But to write me. And that when he found some safe place far away in the West, I would join him."

Selwood only looked at her—not unfeelingly, but as one who could say nothing because he knew of nothing to say. Margaret moistened her parched lips. "He never wrote me," she said, in a low, hard voice; "if he did, I never got the letter. I made up my mind he must have been hurt, or killed, and that I would find out, or find him, myself. And after weary, weary months of search I did find my husband—here—in Sleepy Cat."

Her eyes had dropped from her listener's eyes. Her head hung. Her voice fell still lower. "He was not hurt, nor dead. But worse for me—his feeling—for me—was dead. He cared nothing for me—nothing—"

"But you," interposed Selwood coldly, "you cared for him. It's an old story. Well, what then?"

SHERIFF JOHNSON CATCHES ANOTHER BOOTLEGGER AND 85 BOTTLES BREW

Geo. Vance Caught In Raid Here

Complaint to Sheriff's Office Leads to Raid Last Week; Receives $300 Fine

TWO OTHER MEN CAUGHT

Complaint reached the sheriff's office one day last week that a Belmond farmer by the name of Geo. Vance was manufacturing some form of liquor. A search of the premises revealed something like 85 bottles of home brew in the basement. The brew was contained in the ordinary sized beer bottle and required several gunny sacks to transport the same to the court house in Clarion. When arraigned before Justice Triggs the farmer was placed under a $1000 bond, which was furnished. Mr. Vance was formerly a resident of Hancock County, but recently moved a short distance across the line into Wright county and occupies a fifteen acre tract of land. It is understood he intends to enter a plea of guilty.

Later—Tuesday the defendant appeared before Judge Clock with a plea of guilty. The court fixed his fine at $300 and six months in the county jail, remitting the jail sentence during good behavior.

Two strangers hailing from Franklin county were fined $25 and costs on the charge of intoxication Monday by Mayor Tompkins. Marshal Jacobi picked them up soon after they landed in town.

The other morning Sheriff Johnson was routed out of bed before breakfast by a hurry up call to Norway township. Mrs. Ole Carleson reported having heard thieves talking in the vicinity of her chicken house. She secured the shotgun and sent several loads of shot in the direction of the noise, but so far as known without effect. A few minutes later an automobile was heard driving down the road. The farmer's wife has her suspicions as to who the thieves are and on their next appearance hopes to improve on her marksmanship.

Clinton Hall, a world war veteran and a resident of Eagle Grove for the past year or more, was taken to the state institution at Cherokee last week by Deputy Leonard and Marshal Jacobi. The young man had been previously confined to the veteran's hospital at Knoxville. He is a former resident of New Providence, Hardin county. For some time past he has been drawing a pension of $90 per month. On several occasions after receiving his check he has become intoxicated and on sobering up would find that practically all of his cash had disappeared.

S. S. Westvold of Eagle Grove has begun action against Mrs. Helena M. Carson to collect the sum of $2972.42 on a past due promissory note. The note in question was assigned to the First National bank of Fort Dodge as collateral and later the plaintiff was compelled to pay the same.

Judge S. A. Clock of Hampton convened an adjourned session of the district court at Clarion Monday to dispose of probate and other unfinished business.

The tax collector's report for the month of July shows the total collection to be $2406.47. For this work the collectors were paid a trifle over $600.00.

Supervisor Mehl has "stubbed his toe" again if our reporter understands the situation. In the publication of the county budget he thought it wise to be economical and have the notice published in but one paper, whereas the law plainly states that it shall be published in all the official papers. As a consequence the whole tax levy is invalid. The notice will need to be republished and in place of saving money the county will be out in the neighborhood of $100.

V. Lux, represented by a Sioux City firm, has filed suit against the Iowa Valley Sugar Co., of Belmond asking judgment against said company in the sum of $11,507.09. Plaintiff alleges he is the owner of unpaid mortgage bonds and certificates in the above sum.

Earl McMahon of Eagle Grove entered a plea of guilty to the charge of making a false statement to the state treasurer for reimbursement of gasoline tax. Judge Clock imposed a fine of $25 and costs.

Ole Tegland of Eagle Grove asks judgment against Sam Bjelland of Clarion in the sum of $3471.24. Plaintiff alleges he signed two promissory notes with defendant and had to pay them both when due.—Monitor.

Before and After the Award

Goodell Trims Klemme, Sunday

Takes 12 Innings Before Fast Goodell Team Wins 5-3

Goodell and Klemme, playing on the Belmond diamond, put up a fast exhibiton of the national sport, Sunday, Goodell winning the game 5 to 3 in a tough 12-inning battle. Chapman, of Belmond, pitching for Klemme, fanned 14 Goodell swingers, while Hamilton for Goodell, held his own likewise and caused numerous sluggers to walk back to the bench. Some fancy fielding was in evidence throughout the game by both teams. and the battle was evenly drawn until the 12th inning, when Goodell players took the lead which Klemme was unable to meet. Fans received the worth of their money in this game, and enjoyed a good 12 innings of base ball.

Belmond played a Mason City team at Manly, losing 12 to 1. The local boys were badly handicapped by their pitcher, a lad from Williams who had injured his ankle and was therefore not in very good trim to pitch. Belmond's one run was made by Maurice Dillon, who went to first on a single, then stole second, third and home.

BOY LOST OVER NIGHT

Grover Yoder's twelve year old son Martin caused his parents considerable anxiety Tuesday night. He left the house about five o'clock clad only in a shirt and disappeared in a corn field with the avowed intention of going to his father who was helping thresh at a neighboring farm. When the boy failed to show up by nine o'clock that night the neighbors and town folks were notified and a search was started for him. They searched all night without success and continued until afternoon yesterday, at which time the boy was seen coming from a shed near the house. He had become confused out in the fields at night and had slept in a stubble field, suffering greatly from the cold, and had slipped back into the shed while everybody was out looking for him in the morning. Probably being afraid of being punished for his act, he kept hidden until hunger brought him back to the house.—Renwick Times.

Careless Driver Injures Pletch

Jos. Pletch Receives Crushed Leg When Buick Hits Him

Jos. Pletch, of the Hub Motor Co., received a badly bruised right leg Friday evening, when he was struck by a Buick car driven by a Mr. Beckman, of the Webb Printing Co., of St. Paul, Minnesota. Mr. Pletch was sitting in a chair on the east side of the Hub Motor Co. office, in the open part of the building containing the gas pumps. Beckman, who had just had his car tank filled with gasoline, started out with a sudden burst of speed and a jerk. He failed to make the turn down the walk onto the street, and crashed into Pletch, crushing him back against the side of the office. Mr. Pletch was taken to the hospital, and the following day was able to return home. Although no bones were broken in the limb, the flesh was badly mashed and bruised and has been very painful.

AMES MAN INSPECTS TEST PLOT IN WRIGHT

Many interesting things happen through and because of Ames. As some people know, the college has numerous little test plots of ground over the state upon which commercial fertilizers are experimentally used. These plots are seeded and cared for by the individual farmers upon whose land they happen to be stationed, the same seed being used as in the adjacent fields and the same care being given. The only test plot in Wright county is located upon the farm of Chas. M. Overbaugh and this year is in corn. The state inspector from the college visited this section last week and gave the very gratifying information that the Wright county tract of corn was the very best of the plot series he had seen throughout the state.

Ames is also recommending very highly a new hardy winter wheat called Iobred which has been thoroughly tested for first grade flour. We believe the wheat is on the market commercially this year for the first time. Mr. Overbaugh sowed a bushel and a half of this wheat last September and notwithstanding the dryness of the past season, the increase from this sowing was exceptional, over 34 bushels of fine hard plump grains being harvested.

MORE MARES BRED THAN IN FORMER YEARS

Stallion owners over the state report that they have bred more mares this season than at any time during recent years.

This will mean that Iowa farmers will raise more colts next year and will be on a more self sustaining basis in so far as their farm motive power is concerned.

There is considerable interest in colt shows. Hampton is planning on a large colt show the last of the month. Plans are under way at Holstein, Cherokee, Keosauqua and Maxwell. Probably a large number of such shows will be held during the fall and winter months.

The association is furnishing splendid ribbons for these special colt shows. Twenty-five dollars is also furnished to a few shows that are offering a special prize list. We are anxious to secure the cooperation of the breeders in all parts of the state, in the various phases of work undertaken by the organization.

LARGEST INSURANCE POLICY IN LOCAL HISTORY WRITTEN

O. L. Varland recently wrote the largest insurance policy ever written in Belmond, if not in Wright county, $500,000 for the Central Trust Co., of Cleveland, Ohio, on the sugar factory properties in Belmond. This amount was written in ten different insurance companies, each policy being for $50,000. The insurance covers fire, lightning, wind and tornado, and the annual premium is $5,180. The Central Trust Co. is the company which, acting as trustee for the first mortgage bond holders of the Iowa Valley Sugar Co., purchased the sugar plant at U. S. Marshal's sale at Fort Dodge, last Thursday, August 4.

Some of the equipment has not arrived yet, but is expected soon and Mr. Foss will be ready for business in the near future. He has been connected for some years with the McGuire clothing store, where he has made many business friends and where he has had considerable experience in the tailoring line.

Union Trust Buys Local Sugar Mill

Cleveland, O., Firm Is Only Bidder At U. S. Marshal's Sale At Fort Dodge

HOPE TO RUN NEXT YEAR

The Union Trust Co., of Cleveland, Ohio, acting as trustees for the first mortgage bond holders of the Iowa Valley Sugar Co., Inc., purchased the sugar mill properties of the latter company at the U. S. Marshal's sale in Fort Dodge last Thursday, August 4. There were no other bidders.

The Union Trust Co. bid in the plant at the amount of the Dyer Construction Co. mortgage, plus interest and costs of foreclosure proceedings, the amunt being approximately $546,000.00. Under the decree, they will acquire title to the properties one year from date of the sale, August 4, 1928. The Central Trust Co. of Illinois, trustee for the second mortgage bond holders have nine months in which to redeem the mortgage, and the Iowa Valley Sugar Co. one year.

The Union Trust Co. was represented by their Attorney Mr. Merlett, and Mr. Hunter, an engineer. The Iowa Valley Sugar Co. was represented by Atty. Seth Thomas, of Fort Dodge. A. L. Luick, W. C. Tyrrell, W. H. Adams and V. F. Mikesell of Belmond were present at the sale.

A certain amount of work must be done to maintain the property, and the Dyer Company expect to put on a small force for this purpose, which will be in charge of Chas. Hutchinson, who arrived from Belle Fourche, South Dakota, Sunday.

The Dyer Company have expressed the desire to operate the factory next season, 1928, but have made no definite plans to that end as yet. There will be no operation this year, the reports to that effect being without foundation.

JAMES H. CANNON

James Henry Cannon was born September 25, 1852, at Albany N. Y. and died at Hillside Hospital, Petaluma, California, August 3, 1927.

His parents moved to Iowa in 1858 locating at West Union, Fayette County, where he grew to manhood and was united in marriage to Georgiana Crowe of that place, living there a few years. They then moved to Belmond where he and his brother, Thomas, conducted a meat market for several years, later moving to a farm east of town where he resided until March 1, 1926, when he moved to Petaluma, California.

For the past year he had been failing in health, medical aid failing to relieve him. An operation was the only recourse. But he was too frail to stand the shock, and passed quietly to rest. He was preceded in death by three children who died in infancy, and his loving wife who passed away January, 6, 1898.

He leaves to mourn him four children, Nina, Clem, Glen and Edward, and one brother, J. B. Cannon, of Elgin, Iowa.

Rolfe recently staged a fight against out-of-town bread that was to be brought in by an outside baker. The merchants of Rolfe felt that their bakery was baking good bread and employing home people and paying home taxes and was entitled to the trade, especially as there was no difference in the price of out-of-town bread and the home article—to the public. And so the merchants refused to buy of the out-of-town bread representative.

If Humboldt should adopt that method, have you any idea how many bakers it would take to produce the bread Humboldt customers buy? It would add at least another family to the town, and would turn into the coffers of the local business men the money that the family spent for groceries, clothing and the other things a family uses. It would mean one more sbuscriber to the newspaper, one more taxpayer, one more community man and probably several more citizens—if the baker had a family.

The foregoing from the Humboldt Republican applies very aptly to Belmond. A similar situation exists here, with an outside concern getting the lion's share of the bakery business that ought to be kept at home. This money spent for this outside baked goods would mean a very nice thing to the local bakers. Let's co-operate a little among ourselves and keep the local bakers busy by specifying, when we buy bread at the grocery stores, "Give me a loaf of BELMOND bread." Nine out of ten of us, when we buy bread, simply say, "Give me a loaf of bread." Lets' insert the word "Belmond" in there, and keep the bread and bakery business at home.

SLEEPLESSNESS

The "night devoid of ease" is usually an indication of some ailment. Insonnia is less a distaste than a symptom. Its most frequent causes are indigestion, constipation; there is something wrong with eye, ears, nose, teeth or throat; or one is worrying.

A light supper— a daily diet composed of somebran, more fruits and vegetables and fewer hearty, concentrated foods and starches; a visit to the doctor, dentist and oculist; and trust in Providence—these will permit restful sleep.

One is likely to carry his business anxietiese, family worries, or problems in general to bed with him, and to keep himself so fretted that he cannot relax. Or the ambitious one may so steam up that he cannot dismiss from his mind the big plans he has a brewing, the busy program he will undertake the next day. All this keeps him taut and excited. The idea is to relax, to dismiss the business of waking hours, to just let go and forget and be dead to the world while sleep "knits up the ravelled sleeve." Tea, coffee, alcohol or other stimulants may keep one wakeful.

Often when one is to arise very early the next morning or has some especially hard day ahead and particularly wants to sleep and rest and be fit, then sleep eludes him altogether. The very fact of being so anxious about it makes it harder to relax. The more we try to sleep, the less we can. A too empty stomach may make it hard to go to sleep. To eat a cracker or drink a glass of hot milk may woo sleep. But surest of all is to stop worrying because you cannot sleep.

It is not fatal to spend a sleepless night. The important idea is that the body relaxes and rests. To lie in bed, in darkness, will rest one, even without sleep. It is like taking a slow train to one's destination where as one would arrive much more quickly on a fast train. Without sleep one will rest and feel refreshed in the morning, though he would recuperate more quickly with sleep.

Habit has much to do with sleep. Say your prayers, climb into bed and forget everything. Don't depend on sporific drugs to put you to sleep. They are habit forming, are poisons, the dose has to be increased constantly to be effective and in the end they shatter the nervous system and make natural sleep impossible. Drug induced sleep in not restful, and the sleeper awakes irritable and weary. Fresh air plays a part in making one a good sleeper. The sleeping porch is a good place to sleep. There is something in the adage that the "good sleeper has a good conscience and a good digestion."

IF NOT INVITED

Do not feel insulted if you are not invited to every party your friends have. There are limitations to the number of people one can invite to a party, and most of us would not like to think our list of guests at a party included all our friends. There are those we entertain more intimately and do not need to invite to a party, and there are those who would not relish that form of entertainment, and those to whom we are not indebted and, since we cannot include all our friends and must repay our social obligations, we leave out those to whom we are not at the moment indebted.

It may be that the hostess is saving you for some more select occasion she has in mind, or where you will fit better with other guests of your own more particular liking. And, last of all, it is barely possible the hostess forgot you, her dear friend, in making the list of those to whom she would extend the latchstring, as shoemaker's children must go without shoes. Or, there may have been some other good reason. Hold your wrath in check until you find out. If there is any time when one is likely to become nervous and to make mistakes, it is when undertaking to give a party. Give the hostess the benefit of a doubt and do not conclude at once that she is willing to slight you.

REDUCING DIET

To grow slender, eat what you want, but very little of it. There are certain foods, however, which contain fat and will make you take on weight. These are: bread, potatoes, creamed soups, creamed foods of all kinds, pastry, ice cream, cake, fat meat, candy and rich dressings of oil served on salads. Generous spreadings of butter and generous servings of cream and sugar in coffee add to the calories.

The ideal foods to reduce are green vegetable and fruits, especially those which are cellulose or bulky, such as cabbage, celery, asparagus, onions, green beans, beet gus, spinach, onions, green beans, beet tops, dandelions, radishes and lettuce. When trying to reduce, cut down the amount of food eaten, and drink water, between meals, if you feel faint or hungry.

TO SOFTEN HARD WATER

When calcium, magnesium and lime are present in the water, they react with soap and form a sticky scum. Such water is known as hard water, and is not good for laundry purposes, as it will not behave well with soap and the gummy particles are likely to stick to the clothes and form specks on them, or at least leave them gray and dingy. Hard water may be softened for laundry purposes by adding sal soda to the water. Dissolve one pound of sal soda in one quart of water and use two tablespoons of this solution for each gallon of water. Sal soda is not expensive and it will not injure the fabrics. Very delicate colors had better not be washed in such water for there is danger that the sal soda might fade them, though it is not strong enough to harm colors which are ordinarily fast.

DO IT THE DAY BEFORE

The secret of taking company "easy" or of making Sunday dinner a "soft snap", or of getting ready for a picnic without losing your temper is—doing it the day before. Prepare your heavy dishes a day ahead of time. Have a steam pudding and sauce which can be made in advance. The salad dressing keeps well in the ice box. Almost the whole dinner may be prepared the day before, if only you write out your menu and make up your mind to it. Try it the next time and save yourself much strain and confusion on your busiest day.

FOR FREQUENT WASHINGS

The busy mother who has to wash out suits and dresses for the kiddies every other day will save time by making the week's supply of thick starch at one time. She uses what she needs on the day it is made and keeps the rest stored in a fruit jar in the refrigerator.

LAST DEER IN WRIGHT COUNTY

Belmond, Iowa, Jan. 10, 1897.
E. N. Bailey, Esq, Britt, Iowa.

Cousin Ed:—Reading the article from the pen of J. G. Smith, of the killing of the elk in the country calls to mind the last deer I killed. I think I have the honor of killing the last deer in this part of the state. If not let us hear from the party that killed one later than 1878. At that time I was clerking in the store of J. B. Kern. It was in the month of October. N. Malvin, living two miles northwest of Belmond, came in and reported that he saw two deer in his cornfield that morning and wanted me to go out and see if I could get one. I had no faith that they were deer, as there had not been a deer seen in this vicinity for several years, so came to the conclusion that they were calves. The next day another farmer living about a mile from Mr. Malvin came in and reported that he saw two deer on the river bottom about two miles north of town. This party had lived in a deer country and I was confident he knew a deer when he saw one. So the next morning when I came to the store I brought my rifle with me, thinking if I heard from the deer again I would endeavor to capture one of them. At this time Harry Parker owned the large farm adjoining Bur Oak Grove on the south. He sent his son Charley the next morning to town. He was riding a fine four year old colt. As he was coming along the road about three miles north of town he saw the two deer. He put the spurs to his colt and run him all the way to town. His colt was covered with foam. He rode right to the store and reported that he saw the deer and that they had ears as long as his arm. W. E. McAlpine was passing at that time. He said if I would get ready he would get his ponies and we would go after them. In about three minutes here came Burt riding one pony and leading the other. There was no saddle or bridle on the pony I was to ride. I made some objections, but Burt said to jump on and he said he would lead my pony. I did so, and of all the rides I ever took this was the worst one. Horseback riding was never my forte, but to ride a horse without a saddle or bridle, nothing to hang on to and carry a rifle, was more than I bargained for. Burt lashed the ponies into a run. We went up through main street and I imagined there was about six inches of daylight between me and the pony every jump. I told Burt there was no particular hurry, I thought we had time enough, but I was only a passenger, as Burt held the controling interest in the outfit. All of my pleadings and entreaties availed me nothing. He would slap my pony with the halter strap about every third jump, he was the most excited fellow I ever saw. We made the three miles I should judge by my feelings, in about three hours, but I suppose we were not over fifteen minutes till we arrived where Charley saw the deer. When we got there we saw a man going across the field with a gun, then another ride of a half mile across a plowed field when we overtook the man. He informed us that the deer had just crossed the field, he was after them with a shot gun loaded with No. 8 shot. He told us where he had seen them last, going over a hill about 80 rods farther on. Again we started on a wild ride when we arrived at the top of a hill, the deer jumped up from a slough where they were lying; they proved to be an old doe and a fawn. This was on the farm owned by M. D. Sullivan. They ran through a ravine and stopped on the other side just at the edge of a large cornfield. I slid or rather dropped off the pony and drew down on the old doe, they were about 60 rods off. I made allowance for the distance, but the torture I had passed through the last half hour was not conducive to steady nerves and I over shot her, when they wheeled and went into the cornfield. I supposed they would not stop again until they had gained the grove which was on the north side of the field. We held a consultation and I decided to send Burt around the field, and gave him very implicit instructions to locate himself between the cornfield and the grove, and not to move under any circumstances, even if the deer came out within ten feet of him not to move but just see where they entered the grove. I would take their tracks through the field, and if he heard me shoot not to come to me but to stay where he was till I came to him. Then I waited till I thought he had time enough to get located when I took the tracks into the cornfield. They were making tremendous jumps and it was no trouble to track them as the corn was comparatively clean. After going about 80 rods in the field they came down to a walk. Then I worked very cautiously stepping into a corn row and looking up and down, and then into another and so on until finally I saw the doe standing in a row, about 50 yards broad side, looking at me. I drew down on her and dropped her in her tracks. The fawn ran into an opening and stopped behind a bunch of large weeds. I slipped in another cartridge and shot through the weeds. I think I must have hit the fawn as on the crack of the rifle he wheeled out of there. But McAlpine hearing the report of the gun, dropped the lead pony and started for me on the pony he was riding. He came around the field just in time to meet the fawn. He pulled in after it. I never saw as even a race, it was about half a mile to the river and Burt ran within ten feet of the fawn the whole distance and did not stop till the deer crossed the river. He did not even have a jack knife with him. If he had followed my instructions I would certainly have got both deer. I am confident I wounded the fawn or the pony could not have kept up with it. By the time we got back where I left the doe there were about a dozen fellows that had followed us out from town, all horse back. The next question was how we were to get the deer out to the road. The majority of the horses we could not get within twenty feet of the deer, but we finally found one horse in the lot, by blindfolding him we managed to get the deer on his back and so got it out to the road, when soon a farmer came along and took it to town for me. It was laid in state on the side walk in front of the post office where the majority of the town came to view the remains, then I dressed it, cut in about two pound pieces and gave it to my friends. The fawn was never seen in this vicinity again. I think it must have died from wounds.

Respectfully yours,
D. E. PACKARD.

FREE AIR!

Some of these days there's gonna be a gentleman come to town. He'll be wearing a blue uniform, with an official looking hat, and he'll walk up to Stanzel up here at the Yellow Front Cafe and tap him on the shoulder, and say, "Come on, Napoleon, your room's ready and waiting for you and Alexander the Great wants you to play checkers with him."

All of which thought comes to our mind as the result of a recent letter of G. A.'s in which he offers Coolidge a job. G. A. told Cal he understood he, Cal, was going to be out of a job before long, and there was a vacancy at the Yellow Front hopping counter.

That's the elite way of saying "slinging hash."

If we were G. A., blamed if we wouldn't be afraid they might pick us up and shove us in with Sacco and Vanzetti.

And he sent the letter—honest—we saw him mail it and he had the receipt for the registered mail. He was going to insure it, but we advised him to take out the insurance on himself. He may need it worse than the letter.

All we have to say is, if Cal accepts the position—notice we didn't say job—it won't be long before Cal will own the place and Stanzel will be looking for a job.

And like we said before, probably a gentleman in a blue uniform will find him one.

The chances are, however, that Cal won't choose to accept it.

After officers caught one of our well known citizens at the Galt celebration, and Fred Johnson comes over and picks off another newcomer in this vicinity, and the city puts on Jack Dempsey to keep watch o' nights, one would naturally think we were in a pretty good way toward being cleaned up. Evidently Roper down here at the Variety and Reynold up at Kinseth's didn't think so, because they're both trying to clean up the town. With soap.

The Red Light district is growing rapidly, the latest addition to the business section of town being the bakery. This part of Broadway is growing so fast that negotiations are under way to move one of the banks down town where it can be closer to the business district.

The city council has been asked to station the new cop down here to take care of heavy traffic at rush hours.

And an airplane landing field is in prospect.

All of which leads us to that famous remark of Horace Greeley's long ago, which still contains as much wisdom and good advice as ever, and we submit it to the struggling young men up the street:

"Go West, young man, Go West!"

AGRICULTURAL NEWS NOTES

ARMY WORM MAKES ITS APPEARANCE

The army worm has put in its appearance in Wright county. It has been found on several farms along the east side. It has done considerable damage in Franklin Hardin counties.

Army worms generally live in low lands, where rank grasses may be found. It also breeds in early sown rye fields. Occasionally the worms become so numerous they migrate from their normal grounds to adjoining fields and destroy leaves and heads of wheat, oats, rye, timothy, corn or any crop in its path.

The mature larva is about an inch and a half long, plump, dark grey to greenish black in color, with five longitudinal yellowish stripes, three on its back and one on each side.

Control Measures

Poison bran has proven most effective against army or even cut worms.

The formulas generally recommended are No. 1 wheat bran 20-25 pounds.

Paris green or sodium fluoride 1 pound.

Cheap molasses 2 quarts.

Water 2 gallons.

No. 2 substitute sodium arsenate one-fourth quart, for the Paris green or sodium fluoride in the above.

Stir above ingredients and add water to make crumbly, not sloppy. If the mixture holds together when pressed in hand it is properly prepared.

The poison should be broadcast by hand as thin as possible over the fields. The mixture is not attractive after becoming dry, so it should be applied in the late afternoon or evening in order to be fresh when the worms begin to feed soon after sun down.

RECORDS LOWER CATTLE LOSSES

In 1925 a group of 20 farmers in Iowa County found from cost accounting records that their cattle were losing considerable money. They noted some of the reasons for the losses and hence, when their cost accounting records had been compiled for the following year, they found that they had reduced the average loss and increased the butterfat yield per cow by 8 or 10 per cent as a result of better feeding and care of their milkers.

Only 2 farms out of the 20 keeping accounts showed a profit on their cattle enterprise in 1925, but 5 out of the 20 broke even or realized a profit in 1926. The various farms ranged from a profit of $124 to a loss of $1,132 on their cattle in 1926, showing that some were handling their cattle to much better advantage than others.

In figuring profit, the cattle were charged not only with the feed consumed, but also with labor for their care, interest on the investment in them and for use of buildings, equipment, and land.

There were three notable differences between the 1925 and 1926 records, according to J. A. Hopkins, agricultural economist at Iowa State College, who assisted in summarizing and analyzing the Iowa County accounts. First the purchases and sales of cattle were larger in 1926 than in 1925. Second, more feed was fed per animal in 1926 than in the preceding year. Third, the production of butterfat per cow was 8 to 110 per cent higher in 1926 than in 1925.

In the matter of more feed per animal given in 1926, it was learned from the records that the farmers had increased the corn 7 bushels, fed 1 bushel more oats and 25 pounds more of other concentrates, but that they had greatly reduced the time the cattle ran in stalk fields and slightly reduced the time they were on pasture. Also more labor had been spent on the acttle, which with the better feeding indicated that the cattle had received considerably better care than in the previous year.

The good feeding and care were reflected in the increased butterfat yield, Dr. Hopkins points out. Despite the increase in production, however the butterfat yields were still very low, averaging only 1422 pounds for the cows milked. The yields might still be increased materially by culling out more of the unproductive cows and by giving those kept better feeding and care.

While the cattle enterprise in Iowa County has not proved profitable on the average in the two years cost accounts have been kept there, cattle play an important role on these farms by providing a use for winter labor.

SEED RYE SOON FOR PASTURE

Rye seeded any time now until the middle of September, providing it gets rains and favorable weather conditions should furnish a considerable amount of excellent fall and early spring pasture, according to E. R. Henson of the Farm Crops Department, Iowa State College.

Hundreds of farmers thruout the state sow rye each fall to provide late fall and early spring pasture for their hogs or other livestock. It will furnish later fall pasture and earlier spring pasture than any other crop grown in Iowa, Mr. Henson says.

Rye for pasture should be sown at the rate of about 5 pecks to the acre. It may be seeded in the corn or on the corn stubble where the corn has been removed for fodder or silage. Some use single row drills for seeding rye, while others broadcast it and cultivate it in with a single row cultivator.

While the Rosen variety is by far the best in Iowa, for producing a grain crop, the common rye is satisfactory for pasture purposes, according to Mr. Henson.

Some farmers seed sweet clover in the rye during the winter or drill it in the next spring and use the clover as pasture the following season.

Rye sown from now until the middle of August with favorable weather should furnish some pasture by the last of September. For spring pasture, it may be sown as late as the middle of October with a fair degree of safety. If intended for fall pasture, however, it should be seeded not later than September 15.

73 SCHOLARSHIPS PROVIDED

At least 73 Iowa farm boys who desire an education in agriculture but lack the necessary funds will have an opportunity to get a $100 scholarhship, to be used at Iowa State College, Ames, as the result of donations from a number of individuals and organizations.

One scholarship will be awarded in each of 73 counties and the counties where these will go will be decided largely on the interest and need shown. Any farm boy in Iowa 17 years of age or over, whether he has finished high school or not, is eligible to try for one of the scholarships. If he has not finished high school, he can enroll in the herdsmens course or in the two-year course in agriculture at Iowa State College.

Application for the scholarship should be made either to the county agent, the county superintendent of schools or to the dean of agriculture at Ames. The boys selected in each county will be chosen by a committee consisting of one farmer, the county superintendent of schools, the county agent and a representative of the company awarding the scholarship.

In addition to the $100 given, the state is remitting fees to the extent of $60 so that each winner in reality will get the equivalent of a $160 scholarship.

There's a man in this town we used to think was mad at us. But we know better now. It's his natural expression.

"I want to return on a late train," said the man to the ticket agent. "Well, I'd recommend Number 7. She's usually as late as any of 'em."

Animal trainers say it isn't any trick at all to put your head in a lion's mouth. The trick, we suppose, is in getting your head out.

"Willie, will you run to the store for me?"

"Yes, mother. Do you mean the cash store, or haven't you any money?"

Some of these mornings it's going to be cold. Are you prepared for it? The coal supply is the important item and it should be in your basement before the cold weather comes. We can deliver promptly now, have coal coming in right along now.

The magician had broken the eggs in the borrowed hat, and later returned the hat unharmed. Next day an argument broke out at the corner grocery. "Bet a dollar I can do the same trick," said the proprietor. The bet was made and the hat borrowed. The proprietor gravely broke a dozen eggs in the head-piece and then stirred up the mess with a stick. Suddenly he stopped. "Well, I'll be darned!" he exclaimed. "I've plumb forgot how to finish the trick."

CHEVROLET

Consistent Progress and Proved Design- have resulted in the most Amazing Quality in Chevrolet History!

The vast resources of General Motors and the tremendous manufacturing facilities of Chevrolet have made possible this amazing quality.

GENERAL MOTORS

The Chevrolet Motor Company is a unit of the General Motors Corporation—the greatest automotive organization in the world. Utilizing the vast resources and engineering facilities of the organization, Chevrolet enjoys, to the fullest extent, these manufacturing advantages—a fact that is largely responsible for Chevrolet's amazing values.

PROVING GROUND

The General Motors Proving Ground comprises a tract of 1245 acres. The entire tract is criss-crossed with roads of every type—from a concrete straightaway and speed track, to deep-rutted clay lanes. There are hills that vary in steepness from a slight inclination to 24%. SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I.—Garth Guthrie, Canadian war veteran, having to live in the open on account of weakened lungs, is factor of a Hudson's Bay post at Elkwan. He came back from the conflict with a permanently scarred face, which he realizes cost him the love of his fiancee, Edith Falconer. Sir Charles Guthrie, his brother, is a millionaire war profiteer.

CHAPTER II.—With Etienne Savanne, halfbreed, his firm friend, Garth meets Doctor Quarrier, geologist, and his sister Joan. Their schooner has drifted ashore. Quarrier complains he has been robbed by a man known as "Laughing McDonald" or to the Indians as "McDonald Ha! Ha!" because of a gem which gives him a perpetual grin. McDonald is Garth's competitor for the fur trade. At Elkwan an Indian girl, Ninda, tuberculosis victim, whom Garth had befriended, is dying. Quarrier hints that Ninda is Garth's mistress, which is hotly resented. Joan, trained war nurse, cares for Ninda, but the girl dies.

CHAPTER III.—Garth tells Joan part of the reasons for his presence at Elkwan. He takes the Quarriers to Albany, from whence they can proceed to Montreal. Charles Guthrie writes reproaching his brother for not coming home. Charles' wife assures him Ethel still loves him, but Garth in his heart knows better. His scarred face has separated them.

CHAPTER IV.—Three of McDonald's party visit Elkwan seeking to buy gun shells. From them Garth learns of evil talk among the Indians concerning Ninda and Ninda, and realizes Quarrier will spread his version of the affair.

CHAPTER V.—With Etienne's help Garth wins the friendship of Saul Souci "medicine man" and treaty chief of the Crees, and gets his promise to persuade the Crees to take their furs to Elkwan instead of to McDonald. Garth is ambushed by Joe Mokoman, Ninda's reputed father, whom the factor had driven from Elkwan. "Shot," Garth's adorable companion on many battlefields in France, saves him, and the Indian is taken, a prisoner, to Elkwan.

CHAPTER VI.—Garth sends Mokoman to McDonald with a message of defiance, and the war is on.

CHAPTER VII.—Garth hails with joy the freezing of the strait, which will enable Souci's followers to bring their furs to Elkwan without difficulty. Etienne craftily spreads reports that McDonald and his schooner are bewitched, and evil will befall all who trade with him.

CHAPTER VIII.—Waiting in ambush to shoot Garth, Joe Mokoman is attacked and killed by Shot. At a "powwow" held by his orders Souci convinces the Indians that McDonald is the friend of demons and to be avoided. The chief counsels them to take their furs to Elkwan, thus assuring the factor of trade which will establish a record for the post.

All this and more the industrious Etienne gathered from the gossiping Crees from the Elkwan while Garth made camp and fed and chained the dogs. His seeds, planted with such care in the camps of the Ptarmigan and Rabbit, had indeed sprouted, were in fact already bearing fruit. The Crees were ill at ease—suspicious of these strangers who had come to the island with their smiles and trade goods, and in the conjury of old Saul, that night, they hoped and waited for the advice and assurance that it would be safe as well as wise for them to carry their fox pelts to the schooner at Seal cove.

As for the old shaman, Etienne learned that he was camped downstream, beside his medicine lodge, alone, preparing himself for communion with his confreres, the spirits which, that night beneath the stars, he would summon with his magic to speak to the Crees, and remove from their hearts the doubts and fears which harassed them.

"Ah-hah!" mused Etienne as he returned to Garth, busy cooking supper. "Old Saul, he keep away; he not see Etienne Savanne." But, gratifying as was the news he had picked up among the gossiping hunters, Savanne knew his Indians, and feared what the night would bring forth. For the old wizard was past master in the art of playing on the superstitions of the Crees, and with his incantations and mumbo-jumbo would doubtless persuade them into starting at once for Seal cove.

He Returned to Garth, Busy Cooking Supper.

But Etienne had no intention of giving Souci a free hand. Secretly, before the ceremony, and openly, when Souci from the tent delivered the admonitions of the spirits, he would brand the old man as the hireling of McDonald, friend of devils. If the outraged Saul dared to start trouble, this might be dangerous with the Crees in a high state of excitement, but the arm of the company was long, its hand heavy, and Etienne Savanne, its servant, feared as a fighter the length of the coast. So the prospect of trouble gave Etienne little concern but the loss of twenty thousand dollars in fur, which the Crees had with them, would be little short of a calamity. On his return to his tent, his active mind groped for the best method of, that night, hanging the shaman with his own rope.

"Well, what did you hear?" asked Garth. "Did you see Saul?"

"No, he keep ver' quiet. De Cree have mooch fur, and manee of de men would go to McDonal', but de squaw have fear of devil. A feller by de name of Savanne, he tell de squaw down on de Ptarmigan some bad story, also up on de Rabbit, an' eet mak' dem squaw ver' nervous." Etienne smiled at the success of his efforts.

"That was certainly a good bit of strategy, Etienne, but you say the men are now wabbling in favor of the schooner?"

"Ah-hah. I t'ink dat Souci, wid hees spirit, weel beat us tonight."

"We've got to think of something to do—we can't let him get away with all the fox in this camp, man!" urged Garth, handing his friend a heaping plate of beans and bacon.

As Etienne ate, his swarthy face was grave with the problem confronting him. What could be done? He even considered secreting himself in the medicine tent downstream, binding and gagging the old man as he entered, and playing shaman himself. But the danger of discovery by the outraged Crees would be too great. Failure would make matters even worse.

The medicine rite was to take place under the moon, which was late, so deep in council of war lingered white man and half-breed, until the silver disk rode above the white tundra already lit by low-swinging stars. Then Etienne returned from a short reconnaissance to report the hunters and squaws already moving to the rendezvous downstream where a fire glowed in the spruce. Small and cylindrical in shape, its tanned caribou-hide walls painted in red and black with the shapes of animals, the sun, and grimacing faces of the spirit friends of the conjurer, the medicine lodge stood a short distance from the fire. Gathered in the warmth of the blazing logs, shawled women and hooded hunters, heads together, conversed in low tones.

Higher over the tundra above the valley, the moon upswung through the star-incrusted heavens. It was a night for magic, and as his curious eyes shifted from the awed Crees to the medicine tent, Guthrie despaired of the efforts of Etienne, in such a setting to nullify the necromancy of old Saul. Moon and stars and the aurora joined with the purple shadows to lend invincible enchantment to the arts of the sorcerer. These simple children of the snows, bewitched by the mystery and magic of the night, would fall willing victims to the voices of the spirits.

Faintly, to the measured tapping of a caribou-hide drum, from the tent lifted low wailing. Seizing the arms of their men, the women at the fire stiffened. Swart faces went gray.

Gradually the wailing drifted into a sing-song, which, accompanied by the shell rattle, rhythmically swelled and died. Suddenly the song ceased. Growls and snarls, whines and mewing—the bickering of beasts—filled the forest. Shrieks of a mating wolverine followed the caterwauling of a lynx. A wolf howled, lonely for his kind. From a September ridge drifted the moaning call of a cow moose. In a swamp a bittern chugged, a whooping crane startled with his trombone-like blast. From the gloom drifted the hoot of the snowy owl. Down wind, in full cry, swept wavies and Canadas, blue geese and brant. Through a repertory of the voices of the night and the sunlit forest wandered the ventriloquist in a marvelous imitation of nature.

Guthrie turned in surprise to Etienne. "He's a wonder!"

"Wait!" was the laconic reply.

Then, amid groans and eerie cries, shrieks, as of souls in torment, the whimper of children, sobs of women in anguish, men tortured, the voice of the shaman addressed the spirits he had conjured from the world of demons. His kinsmen, the Crees, were in great doubt and perplexity, and had begged him to call upon his familiar spirits, who saw into the future as one looks from a hill; to whom the devils seeking to destroy the Cree were as children—harmless. "The hunters," continued the shaman, "possessed much fur—"

Etienne's hand gripped Garth's arm, as he interpreted the speech of Saul. "Now he mek' de spirit tell dem to go to McDonal'."

Selwood of Sleepy Cat

By FRANK H. SPEARMAN

"I stayed here while he was here; then I went to Thief River to be near him—not chasing him, not bothering him—hoping sometime to repay him for his old goodness to me. But he had chosen bad company, and through drink was going from bad to worse. I can't excuse him for the evil. But I know there is good in my husband. I've come to you to plead for his life."

"To me?" echoed Selwood, mildly astonished. "Why to me? What's his name?"

It took all her courage to speak. "He doesn't use his real name here," she said in strained, broken tones. "You wouldn't know it if I mentioned it. He is known here—as Cliff Starbuck."

"Starbuck!!"

She heard the name blurted out in hateful amazement. With dry, despairing eyes she watched the passionless features before her harden into the cold refusal that she saw was coming.

Leaning against the table, with his back to it, the gambler shifted from one foot to the other, his eyes, that he might avoid her eyes, fixed on the floor; he flattened his left hand at his side on the table, and his right hand rested on the grip of the revolver he had slung in the scabbard at his hip.

"I'll tell you, Margaret," he said at last—speaking with apparent unconcern but with deadly point—"I'm sorry you're mixed up with that fellow. But I couldn't do a thing for you, if I wanted to—and I can't honestly say I'm looking to do anything for that man. They're going to hang him—and it's almost too good for him—that, if you want it, is my honest opinion. But you might go and talk to the two Cole boys, John and Abe, if Abe's alive yet; and to the teamsters. If they're willing to let him go"—he shifted again on his feet—"I won't say anything."

"But, John," she pleaded in heartbreaking tones, "if you won't say anything, I'm lost. None of these men would have any mercy for me; or for him but to hang him. They have no hearts, no feeling—you know, I might as well go out and beg the stones in the streets for mercy."

Selwood stood motionless. "He pulled a knife on me in that clinch tonight," he muttered.

Her plea was so swift. "He was drinking tonight—"

"He dragged Christie Fyler out of this hotel down to that—" Words could convey no more of hateful, bitter anger than his words carried.

"He was drinking, John—drinking! And the others were going to burn the hotel—I was here, I know—and I went with her to protect her, John. I went with her! I'd have given up my life rather than she should come to harm. I thought of her. I thought of you—"

"My advice to you would be to let him hang."

She sprang up from her chair, and clasping one of her bony hands in the other, at the waist of her worn dress, stood, dry-eyed, before him. "John, listen! Have you never done things you wish you hadn't done?"

He snorted. "I hope they don't class me with that—"

"You know what whisky will do to a man—"

"For God's sake, don't blame his meanness on whisky—whisky's got enough to answer for!"

"I don't, I don't. I blame it on myself. When I should have told him that terrible night to do right, I told him to do wrong. Pity me! Have a little mercy for me, John. Think of the old padre whose picture you kept here on the wall so long—who has spent his life forgiving men, helping them. Oh, I'll pray that you find that padre, John. If he were here, he would ask you for the sake of Christ and His Mother to pity me tonight, to let Cliff go. Think of Christie, John. You love her, she loves you. Would you spare him if she asked you? I've told her all this. She's in my room now down the hall. She'll beg for his life of you this moment if you'll let her—she told me she would. She has forgiven him. Oh, God!" Her words poured out in a torrent—low, tearless. She sank before him on her knees. "I'll do anything for you you could ask of a woman, John. I'll pray for you every day and night of my life. Have pity on me! Spare him to me for one more—just one more chance!"

She had caught his bandaged hand in her thin, knotted fingers and covered it with her forehead. He stood irresolute, wanting to pull it away and ashamed to—uneasily listening and thinking. A long time he stood.

Then, suddenly, his face darkened. He jerked himself angrily up.

"What do you want me to do?" He threw the words at her with a rude savageness that would have frightened another. But Margaret knew what his words meant. She scrambled to her feet and caught his hand again in her hands, and broke into a flood of tears. "Oh, I don't know. I don't know," she sobbed; then she lifted her streaming face with the tender confidence of a child. "You will know, John."

"Sit down," he snapped. She shrank away. From her chair she only looked her hope and her gratitude and watched anxiously the play of his features. Selwood with a vacant expression, took up from the table Scott's cigarette, put it between his lips, and slowly felt for a match.

"I'm doing something I don't approve of," he said sulkily. "Nobody else will approve of it, that's a cinch. This buck has tried his blamedest to kill me—and done worse'n that. Nobody outside a lunatic asylum would turn a hand to help him. If I wasn't a blamed fool, I wouldn't."

She bowed her head. "Ask Bob Scott," he went on, "to bring McAlpin in here—McAlpin is waiting for me down-stairs. But if you want to save your man, don't let Pardaloe come in. When Scott and McAlpin come in here, stay outside the door till I send for you.

"Boys," he said to McAlpin and Scott the moment the door of his room closed behind them, "Meg, out there, is the wife of this hound Starbuck. You didn't know it; I didn't—nobody around here knew it. I can't tell you everything she told me tonight—if I stopped to, they'd have Starbuck hanged before I got down there. And I can't tell you why I've promised her his life—but I've been just blamed fool enough to do it—that's all. And"—he spoke low and with stubborn intoning—"when I make a promise, I don't allow any man to interfere. To begin with, Starbuck is my own personal prisoner. I want to get him away without hurting some people's feelings—you can understand that. Will you help?

"Well," he continued, as he listened to their protests of loyalty with an ungrudging assent, "I thought maybe you would. Now call in Meg."

Scott opened the door, and Margaret Hyde, looking questioningly from one to the other, as if to read her fate in their eyes, stepped inside, and the door was closed behind her. Selwood spoke again. "Starbuck and Big Haynes," he said to her, "are tied up and locked in the harness-room at the barn. Lefever's men are guarding them. I'll go down with you all and take care of Lefever. He'll call off his men and leave me to look after my prisoner. Bob, you cut Starbuck loose. McAlpin, you have horses saddled at the back door of the barn, and Bob will ride with Meg and—him to the east end of town. Nobody," he spoke now to Margaret Hyde, "will bother you beyond that. Keep out of the way of travel and of our men, but get east as fast as you can. If you can get to Medicine Bend, you'll be all right—nobody there to bother. But between here and there you'll have to look out. Any of our boys or the Vigilantes will shoot him on sight. Leave the horses at Medicine Bend in our barn—Well, I guess that's all."

* * * * * * *

Under one pretext or another, Lefever, amenable to Selwood's plea for Meg Hyde, who, for Lefever, had never refused to take care of a sick teamster, got rid of the guards. It was more trouble for Lefever to dispose of the remainder of his fighting men, but on the strength of burning rumors, in the invention of which the wagon boss easily excelled, the men were sent on various but pressing wild goose chases, and Selwood's way was cleared.

He left Margaret in the office and took McAlpin well down the dark gangway, near one of the big oat-bins.

"Where have you got Haynes?" asked Selwood.

McAlpin shuffled about and scraped his feet. "John," he said apologetically, but speaking fast to skate over very thin ice, "it's this way. Haynes wasn't the worst of them devils—now, was he?"

The barn boss looked hopefully for a sign of assent from his listener, but Selwood was silent and emotionless. It made it a little harder to go on, but McAlpin pushed ahead. "The teamsters was for stringing up everybody they ketched after this last fight down at Bartoe's. But I just stood 'em off on Haynes. He told me how come the bunk-house burned. Starbuck and Bartoe sent him to tell you that they wouldn't touch company property if you stayed neutral. But he couldn't find you and gave the word to Lefever, and, Lefever said the teamsters would stay out of it. But some of the teamsters had grievances agin the gamblers, and went out with the Vigilantes, so Starbuck said that released 'em and they fired the bunk-house."

"Where is Haynes?"

"Right here in this bin," explained McAlpin, pointing to the bin at their hand; "he's under the oats—tied up and all safe till you decide whether you'll let them dashed Vigilantes hang him—but he wasn't the worst of them devils, John, not by no manner o' means, at all."

"Get him out," directed Selwood, still non-committal.

McAlpin, handing his lantern to Selwood, sprang into the bin and began to paw down into the oats. In one corner he had left an airhole, cunningly contrived with empty sacks, and after digging at this corner, McAlpin uncovered Haynes, cut the ropes from his arms, and, digging out his feet, cut the ropes from his ankles.

"Ed—" I began Selwood

Haynes interrupted him. "Don't say anything, John. I can't help the way things have gone. But I'll say this: I don't know more'n a child unborn who fired the hall. Bull Page told me the Vigilantes were coming up the hill after me, so I had to light out."

"Well, whatever's coming to you, Ed, there's nothing coming tonight. You know this country 'tween here and Medicine Bend?"

"Backwards and forwards, John."

"Meg Hyde has begged Starbuck from me. It's not coming to him, but I've been fool enough to give in. If they can get to Medicine Bend they'll be safe. If one of the teamsters catches sight of Starbuck he'll shoot him. They've got to get to the Bend, by keeping off the big trail and sneaking through the canyons and behind the rocks. It's your chance, Ed. I've got nothing like hanging against you—not anything like it. McAlpin will have the horses at the back door, and you can do your best to make it with Starbuck and Meg Hyde. Hustle."

Leaving McAlpin to explain, Selwood walked rapidly back to the dingy, smelly office. Margaret Hyde was feverishly waiting. He directed her to go into the harness-room and apprise her husband, making only the request that Starbuck under no circumstances speak to him. After Margaret had gone in and come out again, he told her to go to the gangway door and wait, took the lantern from her hand, went into the room himself, and, bending over Starbuck, cut the ropes that bound him, steadied him on his cramped feet, unlocked the gangway door, threw it open, and pointed to Meg outside.

Starbuck, blear-eyed and blood-crusted, his hair dishevelled and his trousers and shirt awry, was a desperate sight. He gazed at Selwood standing with the lantern in one hand and Barbanet's gun in the other. Selwood silently handed him the gun.

Starbuck had been forbidden to speak. His lips were sealed. He tucked the gun into his trousers waistband, and took a step toward the door that meant freedom. Before the threshold he stopped, turned to Selwood and spoke.

"John," he said in a tone that surprised his listener, "I've been a —." He applied to himself the scurrilous epithet so commonly and freely used among frontier men. But Selwood heard it from the lips of one who meant now to condemn fittingly only his own shame, not his mother. "I've been one—I know it," he hurried on. "But if I can ever make it up to—Meg—and you—"

Selwood waved him on. "Never mind me," he said evenly. "Your chance lies ahead of you." He pointed to the door. "Take it."

CHAPTER XVI

Face to Face.

With a good part of the town burned, most of the people in hiding, and with few provisions saved from the burned stores, Sleepy Cat lay stunned by its misfortunes.

From the cross-bar of the first telegraph pole planted in Sleepy Cat with grandiloquent words, hung two sinister reminders of the work of the reinforced Vigilantes. But sensational was the unheaval when it became known that Starbuck, organizer and brains of the crooks, had, together with Big Haynes, made his escape.

No explanations were forthcoming from the stage barn. It had happened—that was all. The man captured by Selwood was his own prisoner, it was said, and he was the person to feel most aggrieved.

Bill Pardaloe, when told that Starbuck was missing, stamped and snorted; but under the skillful ministrations of Bull Page was diverted from his noisy intention of heading a death chase after the fugitives, and was persuaded instead to go to bed.

The breakfast served that morning in Doctor Carpy's Sleepy Cat hotel was unusual. At sunrise a barrel of salt pork was luckily found in, and rolled from, a dark corner of the stage warehouse, and, together with a barrel of flour and a sack of green coffee, commandeered for public need.

Not until he had assembled this provender could the busy surgeon-landlord get away to interview the padre, who, he was then told by Scott, had gone up to the railroad station to visit the wounded.

At the far end of the room, sitting on an up-ended keg, his back supported against the wall, Carpy saw one of his much-bandaged Vigilantes. Bending over him with a cup of water while the wounded man drank was a man of advanced years, whose dark soutane easily identified him as one of that small but widely scattered band of men known to the Indians of every tribe of the West, from the Staked Plain to Hudson bay, as black-robes.

"Padre," said the surgeon, coming up with blunt raillery, "I'm glad to see you making yourself useful. If you want a job nursing, I'll hire you right now; I'm doctoring this outfit."

When the back-robe smiled, his features lost their stern repose. "It would not be new work," he replied in a heavy foreign accent, "but I'm sorry to see such warfare, such bloodshed—and what about?"

"Padre, some of this Sleepy Cat blood needed to be shed—in fact, a good deal of it," observed the doctor evasively. "I'll tell you all about it. First, though, I want to ask you a few questions, Padre, about something that happened in this country a long, long time ago—going on thirty years. How long have you traveled this country, Padre?"

Carpy was not a hard man to read. Single-minded, bluntly outspoken, his honesty of intent was written on his open countenance, and the experienced reader of men before him perceived it all. The composed black-robe parried his question, all in good part, with another: "How old are you, Doctor?"

Carpy laughed and shook his head. "Doggone near forty, Padre—if I must say it."

"Then I crossed these mountains, first, a good time before you were born."

"Why, you must remember old Fort Pierce."

"I was here years before Fort Pierce was built."

"Well and good. Do you remember an old fellow there named Colonel Roper; he commanded there a long time—of course," added Carpy apologetically, "he wasn't as old then as he is now."

"I did not know him."

"Ever know his son, Lieutenant Roper?"

"I never knew any of the officers at the fort."

"Were you ever there?"

"No."

The good-hearted surgeon began to grow uncomfortably warm in his difficulties. "Well, then, you never married anybody at the fort?"

"Never."

"Was there any other black-robe through this country thirty years ago, Padre?" he continued, with oozing hope.

The padre answered after careful thought. "No," said he.

"Doggone it!" exclaimed Carpy, knitting his brows, but reduced in the clerical presence to his one effeminate epithet; "I can't see how it is—and Bob Scott swears you are the man!"

"What do you mean, my Doctor?"

"Did you ever marry anybody out here?"

"Many of the Indians, of course, my Doctor; sometimes a white man—a trader or a trapper, and an Indian woman—very rarely a white couple, very rarely—usually on the steamboat. Once, camping on the river below Fort Pierce, I married a young army officer to a young white woman. But that poor man was killed soon afterward—"

"In the Roper massacre at Crawling Stone wash! My God!" exclaimed Carpy, the perspiration starting from his forehead. "That's the very story!" He seized the padre incontinently by the arm. "Come!"

The Roper Massacre at Crawling Stone Wash.

Before the two men reached the hotel the padre, urged to a brisk pace by his companion, had all of the story the doctor had. Selwood had brought Tracy up from the barn to the hotel, made him comfortable in a room, and was walking down the stairs when Carpy opened the front door of the hall and ushered his companion in.

"He's got it!" cried Carpy to Selwood, loudly, and before any one else could speak a word. "He's the man! He married them." Carpy, in his excitement, caught the padre's arm with one hand to urge him forward, and shot the other like a semaphore out at Selwood. "He's got it, John," cried the doctor. "This is the man! He married them. He knows everything, Padre"—Carpy turned to his companion and pointed to his friend—"that's their boy standing right there!"

Selwood had need of all his restraint. He stood, motionless, on the lowest tread of the stairs. The missioner scanned the serious features before him with composed and penetrating eyes. "Is this, then," he said, for Selwood made no attempt to break the silence, "is this," repeated the black-robe slowly, "the child of my marriage of that young lieutenant so long ago?"

The gambler made no answer. Instead, he sat down on the stair and buried his face in his bandaged hands.

* * * * * * *

Selwood spent long hours that morning with the black-robe. He urged him to come up to the hotel and remain over night. But the old campaigner would not leave his Indians, and professed himself unwilling to risk sleeping in a room lest he take cold; he preferred to camp with his escort, who had pitched his tent down by the river—and could not be dissuaded. But he wrote out for Selwood such details as he could remember of the eventful night of the marriage of his father and mother, and gave it to him.
